No. 353.—Preventing Competitors From Stealing Your Employees.

The following willl come rather close to the experience of many readers hereof:—

Troy, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—For the general "good of the order," will you say what is our chance of doing anything with the following case: For three years we have employed a young fellow as store salesman. Once in a while he would go out on one of the routes, but not often. His particular position was store salesman, and he was our best man in this respect. We regarded him as valuable and had increased his salary several times during the three years that he had been with us.

When he first came with us we made a one year's contract with him, which contained a clause that if neither party gives notice it shall go on from year to year after that. It was never renewed, but we considered that we were working under it on account of the clause we refer to. It has been changed by changing the salary, and we have been told that this sets aside the whole contract. In fact, the young man himself is under that impression and we believe he was told so by a lawyer. At any rate, he suddenly left our employ last week to enter a competitor's service, and we have discovered that the competitor wrote to him as long as six months ago to induce him to leave our employ and come to him at an advanced salary. We cannot easily replace him and he has approached our customers and will do all he can to take his trade with him. What we particularly want to know is, has one firm the right to take away another firm's employees when same are under contract? But perhaps the young man was not under contract. Please give us all the help you can. J. U. & Co.

Right here and now let me do my best to lay a delusion which is cherished by a surprising number of business men, viz., that the change of one term of a contract, such as the salary to be paid one of the parties, makes the whole contract invalid. Nothing is more false. The parties to any contract, acting in unison, can change any of its terms without affecting the others. A contract of employment providing for a salary of $25 per week is just as valid after the $25 has been raised to $30.

All my life I have been reading, ever and anon, the story of the shrewd employer who wished to rid himself of an employee with whom he had a contract. He is supposed to have been advised by a monumentally clever lawyer that he could kill the contract merely by advancing the employee's salary. This he did, and before the employee's thanks were dry on his lips he discharged him. There was never the slightest basis for that story under any contract law of the United States.

The answer to my correspondent is that if a valid contract of employment existed between himself and his salesman, and if the existence of that contract was known to the competitor who took the salesman away, then he can sue the competitor for damages for "interfering with the contracts of others." And even if the competitor did not know of the contract, he can still be sued if he retains the salesman in his employ after being told of it.

The law penalizes any man who knowingly intrudes himself into other people's contracts and inspires one party to break them.

So that the question presented is reduced to this: Was there a contract of employment? By that I mean more than a mere arrangement that A shall come and work for B at so much a week. That of course is a contract, but not one for any particular time, and not one which any outsider is bound to respect particularly. To be immune from outside interference a contract of employment must be for a particular time, and must be interfered with within that time.

Without doubt a contract for one year, with a clause that if not called off it shall be automatically renewed from year to year, is a contract just as binding as if it had been formally renewed each year. I see no reason why this correspondent has not a good right of action against his competitor. Really in cases like this a suit against a competitor is about the only redress the former employer has. He can sue the employee, but this gets him nowhere, because often the employee has nothing. In the case of very special and valuable employees—experts not easily replaced—you can get an injunction forbidding them from working anywhere else, but even then you cannot physically make them work for you. But in the average case, unless you can go against the interloper who has stolen your employee, you cannot go with effect against anybody.

I advise making a written contract for some period with every employee who is of any material importance. The contract will not prevent you from getting rid of him if he is worthless.

Question: * * *, Pa.—Herewith we enclose you papers sent to us by Mr. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.

If we understand the law correctly it would not allow any person licensed to sell oleomargarine in ————, Lehigh County, and not handling anything but oleomargarine, to travel through ————, Northampton County, and take oleomargarine business out of our town unless such person would take out another license for the sale of oleomargarine in ————.

————, of ————, Lehigh County, is doing that very thing; has a hired man that travels through our town by team for probably a year or so. On the first day of February, 1916, we took out a license for the sale of oleomargarine and are doing a nice little business on same, but at the same time Mr. ———— covers all of our territory and naturally does take some business that belongs to us if we understand this oleomargarine law correctly.

Please note that he is licensed sell oleomargarine in Leh County and yet covers all of —— Northampton County.

We would kindly ask you to l into this matter and if found ille give us legal advice how to rem same.

Answer.—The papers enclo were a form letter by Commissio Foust, to the effect that a re oleomargarine license only perm the sale of oleo at the place nam in the license; also an opinion Deputy Attorney General Harg which after discussing the l reaches the following conclusio

To be more specific: If a reta merchant, who holds a retail ole margarine license, has regular clerk taking orders for groceries, and o ders for oleomargarine are take along with other orders, by suc regular clerk or employee and t oleomargarine is marked and s apart and the name placed on ea package in the place licensed, a delivered as and when the oth goods are delivered, such a tran action would be within the licen of the retail dealer.

It may be that there are reta dealers in cities whose regul trade extends into outlying distric In such instances sales made, above indicated, on orders taken such territory, would be within t license.

But I am of opinion that a cense to sell oleomargarine at ret does not give the holder there the right to send agents and ca vassers to take orders, especia for oleomargarine, into territo into which the business of such r tailer would not ordinarily exte particular into the other cities towns in which there are oth similar licenses.

My judgment is that a man has a license to sell oleo in Le County could not sell it in No ampton County as a peddler or vasser. If he has a retail stor Lehigh County and sends out w ons into other territory to c and deliver orders for his gen line, he could in my judgment cept orders for oleo with the o goods, put up the order in his store and deliver in the reg way. That, I should say, is not ing oleo anywhere but his store, where he is licensed to But I do not believe he can wagons out into other territor work up a regular oleo busine that territory, without havin license to sell in that territory.

I should lay the full facts be the Dairy and Food Department

Reynolds & Son The Valatie Grocers

This is in my judgment good advertising. I should expect it to get traceable results. Standard goods, described, exploited and attractively priced. That is the whole science of advertising right there. All the others are along the same line. One is headed "Nine Special Bargains," and the idea of all is to offer well known or high-grade goods persuasively and at tempting prices.

Even package advertising has to be done right or it isn't effective. I knew a retailer once who was spending a considerable sum of money in slips for packages. He had them carefully put in every package that left the store, but no business came from it, and some tests that he made with very great bargains fell flat, showing apparently that people weren't seeing the

Of course I don't believe it would be good policy to do no advertising except through circulars in packages—such advertising ought to be considered a mere adjunct. In Reynolds & Son's case it would have been a good idea to run this very matter in a newspaper advertisement and reprint it in circular form for packages. That would tend to make the newspaper advertising doubly effective.

advertising at all. He investigated and found that his clerks had a scheme of slipping in the circulars in such a way that when the packages were wrapped the circular would always be on the opposite side from the knot. That meant on the bottom. When the customer laid the package on her kitche table to open, the knot wou always be on the top of cour which means that very often the a vertising would not be seen, h would be gathered up with t wrappings and thrown awa Orders were given to put the ci culars on the top, under the kn and the very first day this was do he got an order by telephone. suppose advertising like this d some good—if it is seen—even if brings no direct business, but ought to bring direct business, a if it doesn't there is a reason for i

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. Sweeney, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

You Haven't Quit School Yet.—You have only changed your methods of study.

We all go to school every morning, and we are all paid for doing it.

In store-school we have the benefit of real action. We work the problems out on a practical business basis. Our theory term is over.

We divide and subtract and add and then take the real money.

"Examples" become living transactions.

Our store-school treats hundreds of subjects and you can specialize in every one of them from toothpicks up. Fine change for a fellow if he has sense enough to cultivate the school habit.

A woman was told by one of her friends to buy anchovy paste and serve on a certain occasion anchovy sandwiches. She asked the clerk what this "paste was, anyway." He didn't know a thing about it. He didn't even know what it was used for until she told him —incidentally.

No store-school habit, you see. Had he had the habit he would have said, "Anchovies is a very small fish caught in great abundance in the Mediterranean and are very tasty when cooked, seasoned and chopped for sandwiches, as the relish is somewhat out of the ordinary, no doubt it will be much appreciated."

Don't you think a little bit of talk like that is a great aid to selling things? What are we in this store-school for, anyway, if not to take advantage of its subjects.

A pail of pickled herring was played garnished off with bay lea bits of thinly sliced pickles and ca Done up in real German style.

"Do these have to be cooked?" Mrs. New Jersey. "Oh, yes—yes," the clerk, "they're very nice fried."

See any store-school habit there?

Imagine anybody frying a pi herring.

Yet the above question was asked the above answer given.

Is it any wonder that a movem on foot to make an organization o store-school and adopt a direct tra system?

In the meantime, any one of yo inclined, can pick up an imm amount of information day by day.

Pride in one's calling is a great centive.

We were sitting around chattin evening, and in the company w superintendent of an iron mine. A ple question, or what sounded lik was asked about ore. The iron was unable to answer it. It hurt pride, but it taught a lesson, as he afterwards remarked.

So cultivate pride to the extent being ashamed to be ignorant of co mon things, at least, in connection w your business.

Don't infer that you are to be an pert or an authority on foods. If y were, you would not, in all probabil be selling groceries at retail, but kn something about the goods you hand so that you can give a satisfactory swer to your customer. Keep up store-school habit.

Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association.

President McLaurin, of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, is not in accord with Oscar McGlasson, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, in the latter's belief that the National Bankruptcy Law should be repealed. Mr. McGlasson is actively campaigning to that end. President McLaurin has sent the following to the members of the Southern Association:—

> I am unable to conclude that repeal is the only remedy for a defective law. I believe that the commercial interests of the South should take time to consider and deliberate upon this subject carefully before reaching any hasty conclusion as to the wise method to pursue in correcting weaknesses in the bankruptcy law. I am not prepared at this moment to indorse the statement that we should have no bankruptcy law, while, at the same time, acknowledging unqualifiedly the unsatisfactory results to be obtained through the administration of the existing law.
> Having in view the highest and best interests of the trade, I am impelled at the present moment to discourage the idea of our merchants or business men throwing their financial support to any effort having in view specifically either the repeal or the amendment of the law, but, on the other hand, I think for the time being it will be better to lend our financial and moral support to an effort to bring about such a consideration of the subject as will result in placing before us for a calm, intelligent determination:—
> 1st. The real purpose and benefits of a bankruptcy law properly administered;
> 2d. The possibilities of such amendments to the present law as will, under proper Federal supervision, prevent the dissipation of a bankrupt's assets and better methods of preserving the real value of those assets;
> 3d. Such a specific exemption as will supersede the exemption laws of the various States.
> 4th. The fixing by Federal statute of all fees and the conditions under which a discharge in bankruptcy shall be permitted;
> And such other remedial measures of like importance.
> If ever there was a subject of vital importance to the commercial life of this country, that calls for calm, unprejudiced consideration and careful analysis in order that the best and wisest results might be obtained, I believe the bankruptcy law to be such a question. I deem it my duty to caution any ill-advised, rash, expensive activity which might prove in time to lrave been without results. My opinion is that the business men of the Southland will find in the near future more ample opportunity to exercise themselves financially in an effort to solve this great problem with which we are confronted.

Largest Cash Register Sale Ever Made.

The National Cash Register Co., Dayton, Ohio, has just announced the largest single sale of National Cash Registers ever made in America. The order, which was received from the Jordan-Marsh Co., of Boston, calls for sixty-five 1916 model registers. Almost $50,000 is involved in the deal.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Of Course We'll Take One Order, But Read On

¶ Of course we want to sell you a single order of Fruits and Vegetables—we'll be exceedingly glad to—but we should feel as if this advertising or ourselves had failed if you didn't settle on us as your Fruit and Vegetable headquarters.

¶ Permanent customers are what we want. Our plan of handling them deserves permanent customers, and we can hold them if we get a chance. We have held some for over thirty years.

¶ It's a heap easier to buy Fruits and Vegetables of one house, than it is to shop about—if it's a house you have confidence in.

¶ Are you receiving our price-list regularly each week? If not, a postal will bring it to your desk.

In Every Basket

Greater than any possible profit to the up-to-date grocer is the satisfaction of selling a good article.

Shredded Wheat

brings to the grocer both profit and satisfaction. Shredded Wheat in every basket that goes out means satisfied customers. It is always the same high quality —the one universal, staple breakfast cereal. It is ready-cooked and ready-to-serve.

This Biscuit is packed in odorless spruce wood cases, which may be easily sold for 10 or 15 cents, thereby adding to the grocer's profits.

Jobbers of Three States Meet in Reading for Tenth Annual Convention

Meetings Are Marked by Papers of Unusual Strength and Value. Secretary of Commerce Redfield Speaks on Wednesday Night. Paramount Theme is Helping Retailers to Meet Chain Store Competition. Arjay Davies the New President and Philadelphia the Next Convention City.

The first session of the tenth annual convention of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, with more than 100 wholesalers present, held in the banquet hall of Berkshire Hotel, Reading, Pa., was called to order at 10.45 by the president. Invocation delivered by the Rev. J. F. Crapp. Address of welcome by Mayor E. H. Filbert on behalf of the city read by Mr. J. J. Knoll, the Mayor being absent from the city.

E. J. Morris, representing the Chamber of Commerce, also extended greetings to the association.

Mr. Martin H. Strauss, not yet having arrived, Mr. Fred. R. Drake, of Easton, Pa., was called upon to respond to the greetings of welcome. Roll call and reading of the minutes were dispensed with and the president proceeded with the annual addresses.

Mr. Hewitt's yearly report was as follows:—

March 7, 1916.

To the Members of the Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware Wholesale Grocers' Association.

Gentlemen:—This sad and awful European war has left its mark upon our trade during this past year. The beginning of the year 1915 found the grocery trade demoralized with poor business and declining prices, which continued until the late summer, when prices began to soar, and many articles of merchandise became difficult to obtain.

I am happy to say, however, that the improvement to business which came in the fall was so rapid and large that the earlier depression has been forgotten and general prosperity is the feature of to-day.

It behooves us all to act with caution in this period of high prices, for the unhealthy stimulus of the war in Europe must be followed by a great reaction.

Your president, in conjunction with a good committee, was active in endeavoring to secure a direct steamship connection between Philadelphia and the Pacific coast. Our efforts were partly successful until our Panama Canal was overwhelmed with great slides of earth, which prevented the further continuance of our work.

A similar committee should be appointed to take up this work as soon as the canal is again ready for business. A direct line of steamers from the Pacific coast to Philadelphia will be of great advantage to almost everyone of our interior members throughout the three States.

During the past year your president, with a committee, held a conference with a committee of the Philadelphia auxiliary of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, taking up the subject of specialty orders and how to treat them. While this association guarantees by its seal the correctness of the sale to the retail grocer, we find a tendency to overload the purchaser, causing embarrassment and sometimes friction between the wholesale grocer and his customer. Some adjustments are necessary upon this point.

Your president, with the valuable help of F. B. Reeves, Jr., Frank Halpen, W. J. Young and C. A. Carey, has also been active this past year in endeavoring to secure some changes for the better in our water contract with shippers from the Pacific coast. I am glad to say that in this matter we are having the helpful co-operation of the Executive Committee of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

Looking forward into the new year I would suggest a greater attention to the importance of our salesmen in promoting business. They are most valuable helpers in the distribution of food products and creators of trade.

In Philadelphia we had two quite successful meetings with our men. We have invited them to sit down with us at a banquet and have discussed with them our local conditions and have been benefited by their hearty co-operation and earnest enthusiasm. We feel that these meetings have given a new impetus to the business life of our city.

I would earnestly recommend that in our local zone meetings some time be set aside to meet your men in this collective way. It will do you both much good.

A great forward step this year in our association is the invitation to the retail grocers of Reading to meet with us for conference and discussion. I consider this a most important step—the bringing together of jobber and retailer must be of great advantage to us both.

During the coming year the question of the Stevens-Ayers Price Maintenance Bill will come before us for discussion. It is a question that should be given most thoughtful consideration. We should not be too hasty in coming to a conclusion. I hope also we will have a clearer light upon the workings of the Fair Trades Commission.

I hope you will all enjoy this present convention and enter heartily into the discussions, so that we may all receive valuable hints to help us in our business for the coming year.

Mr. A. M. Graves followed Mr. Hewitt with his report as secretary and general manager.

The secretary's annual report was as follows:—

In our last report we expressed the opinion that this country was on the eve of a great prosperity, possibly the greatest it has ever known in its history. Gentlemen, that prosperity has arrived; it is here, and is seen and felt in almost every line of industry. We rejoice and are exceedingly glad to know that the wholesale grocers, after waiting through six or seven months of the year, are now enjoying their fair share of these good times, and we trust a reasonable increase in profits.

We have recently compiled a routing list of retail grocers of Philadelphia proper, numbering 5,421 stores in all, classified as follows: Chain stores, 817; association stores, 860, and strictly independent stores, 3,744. It is estimated that the Philadelphia chain store companies operate about 480 stores outside of Philadelphia. We have a list also of all retailers outside of Philadelphia located in the territory covered by this association, and members on application can be furnished with a list of retailers in counties covered by their salesmen. We cannot guarantee this list to be absolutely correct up to date, owing to constant changes in the ranks of the retail trade, but no doubt sufficiently so that it will enable you to check with it the names you have on your books.

The adjustment of membership dues, as advised by the Executive Committee, to correspond with the association year, which begins March 1st of each year, has affected our finances somewhat, but will right itself next year, as all annual dues hereafter will be due March 1st and payable right after each annual convention.

The receipts and disbursements, as per our records, are as follows:—

Balance March 10, 1915.....	$556 97
Receipts from dues for the year	7,400 59
Receipts from other sources..	512 61
Total	$8,470 17
Disbursements per vouchers on treasurer	8,177 72
Balance in hands of treasurer March 8th.....	$292 45

Zone meetings were held in Wilkes-Barre, October 5th; at Reading, October 28th; at Scranton, November 4th, and at Altoona, December 4th. These were all well attended and much interest shown in the discussion of trade subjects. Especially was this true at Reading, where we held an all-day session, and at Altoona, where the jobbers' salesmen were present. These meetings act as a clearing house for the adjustment of local differences and establishing a closer personal friendship, break down formalities.

We have felt for a long time the need of some construction work being done by the jobber in the interest and for the benefit of the retail grocer, and last year mention was made of the Harvard University plan to teach the retailer the necessity of knowing his cost of doing business and the importance of adopting a correct accounting system in his business, therefore we are particularly pleased to notice that your Programme Committee has arranged a session this afternoon in the interest of the retail grocer and that they have secured Dr. Melvin T. Copeland, of Harvard University, as one of the speakers. Now, let us make this occasion the outstanding feature of the convention and a foundation for greater efforts along the same line.

A man said to me recently, that as wholesale grocers we plan things on too small a scale. Perhaps he is right. This much is true, that there is an inspiration in a large task which is not possible in one that is small. That it may not be said of this association it plans on too small a scale, we propose to hold a series of retail conferences or institutes of one or two days in two or more sections of our territory during the months of July and August. This idea is perfectly feasible and we hope will appeal to you as practical, constructive work, and which must sooner or later be done if we expect to help our customers to meet the competition of the chain stores and mail order houses and conti business. We believe that when t tails of the plan are explained, manufacturers will be glad to co-c work of the Institute of Cer- d Grocers in England was nded by Mr. Whitmarsh.

J. Grant Schwarz, chairman Legislative Committee, pre- a report of the work of the tive Committee, embodying the killing of a bill prohibiting the coloration of macaroni—objected to because it would have established a precedent opening the way to the passing of more laws not conforming with the Federal law. As far as pure food laws were concerned, the chairman feels that the present laws are efficient.

Mr. Schwarz recommended the wholesalers to do all in their power to help the retailer by having the garnishee act passed. He asked those interested in getting a mercantile tax exemption to meet him after the morning session. He claims that only 2 per cent. of the wholesalers are incorporated, yet they all pay a mercantile tax.

Mr. Schwarz also called attention to a drug act to come up in the next session of Congress that would prohibit others than druggists to handle even such things as caustic soda, etc.

In closing Mr. Schwarz spoke of the cut-rate stores' strenuous objections to the Stevens-Ayers bill. These stores have some pretty strong advertising on the subject because the bill would hurt them—a subject for deep thought.

Mr. Hewitt called on only one manufacturer's representative, Mr. Bond, although he mentioned Messrs. Warren, Frazer, Unger, Nolan, Smith, Rohr, Wood, etc. Mr. Bond, of Wm. McCormick & Co., was asked to talk further on the contemplated drug law.

Mr. Bond feels that opposition will defeat this act in the New Jersey Legislature, as it has in Maryland, Georgia, Kentucky, Alabama and South Carolina. In Iowa such a bill went through because it was not opposed, and Iowa merchants now find themselves able to sell only seven or eleven items understood as drugs.

A certain national association, up to the minute for its own purposes, passed at its national convention during three consecutive years a resolution directing its attorneys to draft model laws which would prevent the participation in any way whatever of anybody but registered pharmacists in the drug business. This is an attempt at class legislation and in this case would hinder the public in securing proper goods for proper occasions.

Such a bill is Senate Bill 231 and House Bill 232, now before the New Jersey Legislature. Such bills should have a provision that noth-6000 California raisin growers are achieving this result with this brand by an organized campaign of national educational advertising.

Raisins Now Sure

This makes raisins a safe buy always by steadying the market price and developing a new demand.

These associated growers virtually have put an end to the old speculative days, when you never knew, from week to week, how much you would have to pay for raisins.

Now you are sure of steady profits.

A National Demand

Our nation-wide advertising is booming the demand for this brand. Sun-Maid Raisins are the only brand nationally advertised. They represent the choice of 6000 vineyards—plump, meaty, luscious white muscatels, sun-cured in the vineyards, seeded, and packed in attractive cartons—36-16s to the case.

The retail price is 15c, 2 for 25c.

WEDNESDAY P. M.

At this session there was a very large attendance, composed of retailers as well as wholesalers, and numbering nearly 500.

The first speaker was Mr. Thomas M. Rice, secretary Philadelphia Wholesale Grocery Salesmen's Association, on the subject of "The Salesman and His Customer."

Mr. Rice's paper was as follows:

I was asked to talk on "The Salesman and His Customer," and after thinking over the relation of the one to the other I became convinced that the whole phase of the question resolves itself around three points, namely:—

1.—The attitude of the salesman toward his house.

2.—The attitude of a salesman toward the goods he is selling.

3.—The attitude of a salesman toward his customer.

The attitude of a salesman toward his house should be loyal, enthusiastic and honest. He must be loyal in his endeavor to conserve its interest, uphold its reputation and maintain for it the respect and dignity established by its years of faithful, honest service.

He must be enthusiastic, but not to too great a degree—over-estimation of his employer's ability with a belittling opinion of his competitor, is not real enthusiasm. On the other hand, his enthusiasm should be an acknowledgment of the fact that he has back of him the mental and financial aid so ably blended as to be able to place him in the position of being a real value to the trade.

He must be honest and have a gentlemanly bearing, for only by his actions can he create that atmosphere of confidence which is essential for his welfare and the welfare of the house he has the honor to represent. Someone has said "your name is your greatest asset, and your personality is your trade-mark," and the salesman who possesses these qualities has won half of the battle, provided he has a clear knowledge of the line he is selling.

The attitude toward the goods he is selling should be enthusiastic, born by the confidence that he has the quality and the price, the two essentials necessary to make him a factor in the trade.

He should know his line and be able to advise his customer as to its selling value, profit bearing and trade winning qualities. His thought should be the good he can do for the grocer with his brands. He may enter a store where the shelves are filled with goods labeled in attractive colors, but that should not dampen his enthusiasm, for if he is wise he will know the quality that is under the brightest label.

I know the goods under my label are of superior kind, I have seen the peas, string beans, corn and tomatoes open; I have seen them ready for serving and I know there will be a favorable opinion as to their character when eaten.

A salesman knowing the quality of his own goods should also have knowledge of his competitor's brands if he wants to talk intelligently. When he enters a store a glance at the surroundings will tell him who is his competitor, and a knowledge of these goods will be a wonderful help. I know Kelso tomatoes and Monco peas and Mistletoe corn and Servis beans are good goods, for I have sampled them. I know the worth of Sunlite rice and Tartan coffee, for I have tried them, and I also know that the firms who place these goods on the market are reputable houses and I would not speak deprecatingly of their goods, but my brand is the Bellevue Brand, and while I do not claim that the buyer of my house has supernatural powers, I do feel that he is a connoisseur in the art of judging quality and is able to place at my disposal the kind of goods that will make me a real value to the trade.

With this confidence I am filled with enthusiasm that my brand of canned goods, my teas and coffee are just the kind a grocer should have if he desires a reputation in his neighborhood for selling the best goods. This should be the attitude of every salesman.

The attitude toward his customer should be one of personal interest. He should endeavor to create an atmosphere of confidence that the customer's interest and welfare is his aim and ambition, ever keeping before him the thought that his treatment of the customer is a reflection of the attitude of the house he represents. His business is creating and catering to imaginary wants, and his pleasing personality and gentlemanly bearing will often plant the seed of future preference.

His sincerity and advice will often counteract the unpleasant atmosphere created for him by some unscrupulous representative. He should remember that every person possesses a certain amount of egotism and every tradesman feels he uses the rarest of judgment in the price he pays and the quality he selects. A continual reference to his competitor's goods is nauseating. If he believes in his house, if he believes in his goods, it is his business to talk his own merchandise. I once asked a grocer what was his idea of a salesman, and his answer was, "A man who was clean shaven and forgot he had a competitor." This is, in a measure, true, for his competitor's brands must certainly have some redeeming features if it is necessary to continue to refer to him to sell his own goods.

Advising a customer to substitute an inferior grade because it shows him a better profit than the article his competitor is selling him is an abuse of confidence which the tradesman has in the salesman's advice.

Recently I asked a very prosperous grocer why he bought his goods from the same houses for so many years, and his answer was, "My confidence in the advice of my salesmen, and only once have I wandered from the straight and narrow path, and that was when I accepted the advice of an inexperienced coffee salesman and purchased what I supposed was a good drinking coffee to sell as my best grade because it showed me a better profit, and the damage he did I will never be able to tell."

So, my friends, I might add word upon word about salesmanship, but after all is said, we find the whole fabric resolves itself about the word "confidence:" the salesman's confidence in his house and in the goods he is selling, and the confidence he creates in the mind of his customers.

Years ago it was measured from the standpoint of how much he could do his customer, but the salesman of to-day must play the game squarely.

His business is that of creating and catering to imaginary wants, and his worth to his house depends upon how much business he secures from the merchants he can bring under his hypnotic influence. While confidence and quality count, price is likewise a big factor. The salesman to be successful must have the hearty co-operation of his firm. To produce results he must have the ammunition—preparedness is the first principle of self preservation and immediate advice on the change of markets is essential to secure business—he stands between two pillars, the merchant on one side and his employer on the other, he is the medium of exchange and the success of both means prosperity for him.

Dr. Melvin T. Copeland, Ph.D., followed with a discussion of methods of estimating the cost of doing business.

Mr. Copeland's address was as follows:—

THE STUDY OF THE RETAIL GROCERY TRADE BY THE HARVARD BUREAU OF BUSINESS RESEARCH.

How many of your customers know what it costs them to operate their stores? How many know at the end of each year how much money they have made or lost? Of those who do have exact figures for their expenses and profit, how many know at just what points their expenses should be reduced? What would it mean to you, as wholesalers, if even 50 per cent. of your customers had these vital facts about their businesses? Yet is there any valid reason why they should not know these facts? These are fundamental questions upon which the Harvard Bureau of Business Research is trying to shed more light.

Before discussing the methods and results of this research, however, I wish to answer another question which is very likely uppermost in your minds—Why are we making this study of the retail grocery trade? In brief, the object of the Bureau's research is to find out the fact about business for teaching purposes in the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. Ours is a professional school and it is absolutely essential that we know the facts as a basis for instruction. The Bureau of Business Research was established by the school in 1911 as an agency for the conduct of these investigations. Up to the present time the Bureau has been studying chiefly the retail shoe and grocery trades, but it has also made some preliminary investigation of several other lines of business, and it is at present commencing studies of the wholesale shoe and grocery businesses. In other words, the Bureau has commenced a thoroughgoing study of the great subject of marketing, which presents such complex problems and which hitherto has been given little scientific study.

In our study of the retail grocery business, as in our other research, we have found it necessary to prepare a uniform accounting system as a means of securing comparable figures for profits and expenses. The introduction of the Harvard System of Accounts for Retail Grocers, however, we consider to be only a necessary incidental. We have not set out to reform the retail grocery business; our task is to collect figures and to learn the best trade practice. The information which we obtain from individual business men is, of course, kept strictly confidential a position as a non-competing ins enables us to obtain information could not be secured by individ vestigators and seldom by assoc The results of our inquiries ar marized for our own use and glad to share these results with b men who are interested.

The Bureau's study of the ret cery trade was begun in June, 19 to the present time we have o detailed information from over tail grocery stores in all parts United States. From a little ov these stores we have obtained complete profit and loss stat Many of these statements were out by our own agents last sum rectly from the books of r About three months ago the published a preliminary statemen results which have so far been o This bulletin, "Expenses in O Retail Grocery Stores," like the a ing system, is sent without any to members of the retail and wh grocery trades.

The United 5 and 10-Cent Stores, a New York Corporation, which has maintained offices at 106 E. Nineteenth street, is in trouble and a petition in bankruptcy has been filed against it during the week. The creditors who are pressing claims against it are the C. C. Thompson Pottery Co., Tritt China Co. and the Diamond Glass Co. The concern has been on the rocks for several months. It was a schemed promotion company in the beginning, organized more as a means of selling stock to the public than for any other reason. It had one store in Syracuse, N. Y., and a few stores in other States.

There has been given out during the week by the National Coffee Roasters' Association a revised form of a "Cost and Freight Contract," which contract is expected in the future to control most sales of Rio and Santos coffee.

The substance of the proposed contract is as follows:—

TERMS GOVERNING DESCRIPTION.

Flat bean, Bourbon and washed.

Size of bean shall be classified as follows: Large, bold, good, medium, small.

Color as follows: Dark green, green, light green, medium, lightesh, light, yellow and fading. Bluish and blue for washed coffees.

Roasting qualities as follows: Poor, fair, good, fine, fancy.

Cup quality as follows: Fair, soft, fine.

These descriptions to be standardized and to remain the same at all times, irrespective of season or crop conditions.

In case that the shipment tendered against the contract does not constitute a good delivery in the opinion of the buyer, and no equitable settlement can be arrived at between the buyer and the agent, the case shall then be submitted to a Board of Arbitrators, consisting of one to be appointed by the agent and one by the buyer. If no settlement can be reached, a third is then to be selected by the two already appointed, whose decision shall be final. The selection of these arbitrators is to be confined to the city or locality in which the seller's agent is located.

Notice of complaint on shipment to be made on ship samples within five days from delivery of samples to the buyer. Should the delivery of the coffee differ from ship samples, the agent must be advised within a reasonable time after the arrival of the steamer.

In case of arbitration the cost shall be as follows, in addition to the necessary expense for sampling and other incidentals, and shall be paid by the loser of the aribitration:

Five cents per bag to each of the two or three arbitrators, as the case may be.

Three-pound samples must be drawn from each chop of the entire shipment, representing an average sample of not less than twenty bags, where the chop in question contains more than twenty bags; where less, the sample should represent an average of the entire chop.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, but firm, particularly on India-Ceylon. Stocks of these teas are low.—Coffee quiet, but firm. Rio and Santos probably just a shade higher for the week. Milds in moderate demand and steady to firm.—Sugar strong and high. All refiners quoted 6.50 cents for granulated and raws being quoted up to 5.39 cents.—Pink salmon is higher on the coast and full line steady to firm. Stocks are not large and demand is good. England reported to be in the market. Sardines, both domestic and imported, scarce and firm, particularly domestic brands.—All canned vegetables unchanged, with French mushrooms the scarcest on the list.—Perhaps canned tomatoes are a shade easier. Prunes steady to firm, in spite of the English embargo on exports, which goes into effect to-day. The outlook seems strong on the coast, but eastern markets are not so strong. Other dried fruits are unchanged, most lines being firm.—Wheat has fluctuated considerably during the week, being irregular and netting rather weak. Flour has followed wheat closely and prices are about on the same basis as a week ago.

An All-Year-Round Profit Maker

Just notice how Grape-Nuts steadily moves from the shelves. The power of heavy, steady newspaper and magazine advertising, sampling, demonstrating, etc., is behind its sale.

is virtually sold before it is bought by retailers—consumers simply call for it. And dealers' profits are increasing in volume each year.

WITH THE EDITOR

The Jobbers' Convention.

As a rule, convention papers are the driest things on earth—even dryer to read than to listen to. This is partly due to the fact that very often silly and empty subjects are assigned, and given to speakers who are not limited as to time.

Last week's convention of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware was an exception to the above rule. Some of the papers read there and reproduced elsewhere are masterpieces of valuable advice and information. Mr. Davies' address on "Closer Co-operation Between Wholesale and Retail Grocers," and several of the others, were addresses such as are rarely heard at trade conventions. It is another notable fact that the atmosphere of the entire convention was permeated with the feeling that the jobbers of this territory must—to help themselves—do more to help the retailer. Not necessarily in the way of selling goods for less money, but in the way of rendering more business service. The commercial world is rapidly reaching the conclusion that a seller's relation to a buyer does not end when he delivers his goods and gets his money, but that he will find it good business to go further and help his buyer dispose of the goods purchased at a profit.

No Excuse.

I confess that I have but little sympathy for the grocer who is the hero of the case under the Workmen's Compensation Act reported in another column. This grocer has just been ordered to pay to the widow of a clerk who was killed while delivering goods, 40 per cent. of the clerk's wages for 500 weeks, a sum which will approximate $3,000. The grocer had not seen fit to take out insurance, so that every penny of this sum comes out of his own pocket.

I have little sympathy for him because he is either an outrageous ignoramus or a jackass. There is not the smallest justification for a grocer who is ignorant about the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act. The act was passed in the spring of 1915, not to go into effect until January 1, 1916. For eight or nine months newspapers all over the State published matter about it, insurance agents solicited business on the strength of it and distributed literature about it, the State insurance fund issued bulletins, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" published the act in full, with a digest of its provisions, and also published for three months prior to January 1st a weekly article on "Possible Cases Under the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act." The grocer who could preserve his ignorance through all this din of information is dead and should submit to instant burial.

And if he knew about the act, but failed to insure himself under it, he is a jackass. In either case, he deserves all he got and I hope this will prove a lesson to him.

Mr. Connolly.

I have received from San Francisco, Cal., in an envelope of the "California Retail Grocers' and Merchants' Association, Frank B. Connolly, Secretary," an article from the San Francisco "Chronicle," which I am evidently expected to publish, and which informs the listening world that

CONNOLLY SHINES IN DUAL ROLE

Retail Grocers' Secretary Appears in His Own Musical Comedy at Savoy

Frank B. Connolly, secretary of the Retail Grocers' Association, enjoyed the unique distinction of appearing last night at the Savoy Theatre in the leading role of a musical comedy written by himself. The play, which he well named "The Follies of the Grocer," was presented for the benefit of the association and was witnessed by an audience that taxed the capacity of the McAllister street showhouse.

Mr. Connolly is also president of the National Retail Grocers' Association. The receipt of the above moves me to inquire:

1.—Who paid the postage on it—the California Retail Merchants' Association, or Mr. Connolly personally?

2.—Why didn't whoever it was pay the full 4 cents, instead of paying 2 and leaving the balance to be collected at this end?

3.—Who cares a darn whether Mr. Connolly goes on the stage anyway?

Mr. Connolly is a man of ability and when he was elected National President I hoped that he would put some filling into that feeble little shell of an organization. He hasn't done it. His activities seem to be spent on doing press agency work for himself. So far as I have seen, he hasn't done one thing, since he was elected president, that helped the National or its members one particle. Why doesn't he pay more attention to his office and less to himself?

Sound Logic.

A writer named Jay Chapin, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., says through "Printers' Ink" that he believes the small merchant will find that the Stevens bill, if it passes, is not the boon he thought it would be. This is his argument:—

> This Harvard report states that the average grocery store carries from 750 to 1,000 brands of merchandise. Suppose that even half of the proprietors of these brands decide to take advantage of this law, if enacted, and regulate the prices, to consumers, of their products. Would not the average grocer find that he had a new and very complex problem confonting him?
> Should he desire to hold a closing out sale, would not the requirements imposed on him be very difficult?
> There can be no doubt that "price cutting" involves unpleasant, and even unfair, conditions to many owners of well-advertised products, but in what field of human activities is there not some injustice difficult to remedy by law? Our patent laws give protection to the inventor for seventeen years only, in return for his disclosing to the public the details of his invention; but do not give a permanent privilege of regulating prices through to the consumer, as it is now proposed to grant to owners of trade-marks.
> Most inventions are designed either to improve a present product, or to reduce cost, and the public has benefited tremendously by the lower prices given to them when patents have expired.
> A trade-mark is most valuable when it signifies distinctive quality to the consuming public; and such recognition may develop gradually without advertising or more quickly through the combination of real merit and good advertising.
> As the laws are interpreted, the owner of a trade-mark has now, perpetual, and broader rights, than those given to the inventor.
> It is natural, however, for the makers of good products to be very sensitive to what they consider fair treatment, even sometimes getting the substantial financial success which quality plus advertising has brought to them.

This is along the line of the suggestions which this paper has made from time to time as to what the probable results of the Stevens bill would be. I despise with all my heart the merchant whose particular brand of salesmanship consists in selling Ivory soap at 2 cents a cake in order to lure people into his store to buy 30-cent tea at 60 cents. This is a destroyer and a deceiver and he ought to be stopped. But comparing him with the Stevens bill is like burning down the barn in order to get rid of the rats in it. The remedy is worse than the disease.

What the Workmen's Compensation Act Will Do to Careless Grocers.

Case Decided in Harrisburg Court That a Clerk Delivering Goods After Hours is Still an Employe and if Hurt is Entitled to Compensation. In This Case the Grocer Had Taken Out No Insurance.

A case decided in Harrisburg during the week under the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act shows how the new law is going to affect grocers who are making no preparations to obey it, particularly as to insuring themselves against loss.

The case was decided by one of the official referees. The complainant was the widow of one Noah Maulfair, a grocery delivery clerk. Maulfair was fatally injured while delivering goods and the widow claimed compensation under the new act. The grocer who employed Maulfair defended on the ground that the latter had finished his day's work at the store and was merely delivering an order as a accommodation. The referee cut short work of this defense, ruling that Maulfair was working for his employer at the time he was injured and was entitled to compensation under the act. He therefore allowed the widow 40 per cent. of Maulfair's wages for 500 weeks. The grocer had not thought it necessary to take out any insurance

Charges Against the Dill Medicine Company.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Mch. 6, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I note with interest what you state in reference to the Dill Medicine Co. in this week's issue. They have a crew of three men in the Monongahela Valley. Two weeks ago they were stopping at the Myford Hotel, Charleroi.

They have been selling from house to house for years, which you can find by asking merchants in Beaver Falls, New Castle, Woodland, Carnegie. In the last mentioned town write Mr. George Exler, who is a subscriber for your paper. They offered his wife five bottles of 25-cent Balm of Life or their cough syrup for $1.

Now I only want you to have facts for your subscribers. This man Exler is a grocer and knows

I meet their canvassers every three to four months, as that is my business, only in tea and coffee.

Just a week ago I ran into their salesman who lives in Pittsburgh and put the matter up to him, and all he said was, "Yes, the Dill Co. has sold from house to house for years."

The Dill Co. would not give up their house to house trade for the store trade.

Follow the places mentioned and you will find facts.

Hoping the merchants will learn the truth through your ever valuable paper, I remain, Association Faker Sent to Jail in Michigan.

J. E. Foster, secretary of the defunct United Retail Merchants' Association, charged with using the mails to defraud, has been convicted by a jury in Federal Court in Detroit and was sentenced to serve five years in Leavenworth prison and pay a fine of $1,000. Foster, an organizer, promoter and self-styled secretary of the United Retail Merchants' Association, with headquarters in Detroit, induced seventy-two merchants in as many cities and towns in Michigan to join his association, each paying $125 as an entrance fee. In return they were to receive billboard and newspaper publicity and coupons to be furnished to give to the trade.

JOBBERS OF THREE STATES MEET IN READING FOR TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

are interested can obtain a copy of the bulletin from the Bureau.

The Bureau has found many queer accounting methods. One retailer, for instance, who actually had a profit, carried his accounts in such a way that apparently his expenses were greater than his sales. In a number of instances retailers were losing money without realizing it, owing to their failure to charge all of their expenses. In a surprisingly large number of stores which kept fairly accurate expense accounts, we have discovered that no accounts for purchases of merchandise are kept; such retailers were gambling upon their profits, even if they knew their expenses. In other stores we have repeatedly found that the business was not profitable because the expense was excessive at some particular point. In one instance it would be salesforce, in another rent, and in another delivery expense. To give an illustration of this: one retail grocer has sent to us a statement which showed that on an annual business of $40,000 he lost $2,000. This retailer was carrying both meats and groceries. He suspected that the loss was due to his grocery business and was contemplating giving up groceries and selling only meats. He asked the Bureau if we had any information as to the relative profitableness of the two kinds of business. We informed him that so far as our figures showed, there was not any appreciable difference in the profitableness of retail grocery stores and retail meat stores. We pointed out to him, furthermore, that apparently the reason for his loss was the fact that his total delivery expense for the year was over 7 per cent. of his net sales, whereas it should not have exceeded 3 per cent. It is in furnishing these standards for the various items of profit and expense that the work of the Bureau is of most value to the retailers. Hitherto they have not had any reliable guides by which to judge their own results.

In all of its work the Bureau has been very forcibly struck by the importance of the figure for annual stock turn. In our grocery research we have found that the stock turn in stores selling groceries only varies from 3.5 to 23.5 times per year; from twice a year to twice a month. The common figure in these stores is 7 times a year. In stores which sell meats and provisions the stock turn is higher, showing a somewhat greater variation according to the proportion of the business which is in fresh meats. The Bureau has concluded from the figures which it now has that any retail grocery store should turn its stock at least 12 times a year, or once a month. What assistance can you as wholesalers give to your retail customers to aid them in turning their stock more rapidly? If you have not already done so, consider what this means to you. The assets of a retailer who is turning his stock once a month are worth more nearly 100 cents on the dollar than are those of a retailer doing the same volume of business by turning his stock once in three months, or once in six months. The man with a fast stock turn is a better credit risk. Furthermore, in our experience a retailer who has a high stock turn is almost invariably successful, and your success depends upon the success of your customers.

The average annual sales per salesperson is another significant figure in our estimation. We have found that this figure varies from $5,000 to $20,000, and commonly it is about $10,000. This brings up again the point to which I have already referred, namely, that the greatest opportunity in the average retail store for economy is to obtain larger sales per salesperson. In this connection, in addition to the more obvious means of reducing a waste of time, some attention should be given to the subject of store arrangement. The Bureau has not had opportunity to carry on any investigation of this particular subject, but it appears as if many grocery stores are very poorly arranged from the viewpoint of selling strategy; the shelves and counters are not placed in such a way as to speed up the sales and enable the clerks to handle customers rapidly.

What is the attitude of retailers toward this research? Some have shown a keen interest and others have not yet come to the point where they are ready to co-operate or to adopt the accounting system. In general, we have found retail grocers very ready to give us such information as they could. The accounting system has been adopted even more rapidly than we had expected and recent developments have shown that it is being used even more widely than we have previously realized. The smallest store which is using our system, so far as we know, has annual sales of $4,000, the largest $175,000. The experience of these retailers has proved that the accounting system is suited to the needs of the small retailer as well as to the needs of the big retailer.

The accounting system sometimes appears complicated to retailers who have little familiarity with bookkeeping and accounting methods. As a matter of fact, however, our experience has proved that with a little study and patience during the first few weeks after its introduction, the system works smoothly, provided the retailer is sufficiently interested in knowing the facts about his business to keep any books at all. The real difficulty with most retailers who reject this system as too complicated, is not the detail of this particular system, but their indifference to any system.

So far I have been talking about this research from our point of view. Now, irrespective of the merits of the Harvard System of Accounts, and irrespective of the value of our research, I would like to add a few words about your responsibilities and your opportunities. The success of your business depends upon the welfare of your customers. If you encourage inexperienced men by means of liberal credits to enter the retail grocery business and then do not aid them to improve their methods, your future is imperiled. Your worst competitor is the inefficiency of a large number of your customers, many of whom are groping for better methods. The retail grocery business appears simple to the uninitiated; in reality it is one of the most difficult of businesses. The problems are many and complex, the possibilities for loss are great and the margin of profit is comparatively small. What are you going to do for your customers? Lower prices will not save them; longer credits make matters worse. The retailer must employ better methods and it is your duty to aid him. This is not a time for "watchful waiting."

His paper was received with thanks.

Next came the address of Arjay Davies.

Mr. Davies paper was as follows:

CLOSER CO-OPERATION BETWEEN WHOLESALE AND RETAIL GROCERS.

A recent interview with a successful merchant of over twenty-five years' experience in the retailing of groceries through general stores, when asked his opinion as to how a closer co-operation could be secured between wholesale and retail grocers, spoke his mind freely and from his personal experience of the past ten or twelve years, stated that 90 per cent of his purchases were through wholesale houses, beca its convenience, its economy and operative advantages. He ha able by this method to combat competition in his locality, a competition can be best appr when told that over fifty com have come and gone and abou half have dropped by the way in town in the last ten years.

That he has been too long in a rut and that running in a rut makes a man too careful, conservative and fearful, and that he lacks the nerve to change the method he has followed for years, even with only fair success. Consequently, they must give way and be brushed aside. Let us resent this charge —take up the challenge. Let us take the advantage that is ours. Let us decide to have better stores, better in activity, better in cleanliness, better in quality of our service. As wholesalers, let us realize that the success of the retailer is our success. Let us endeavor together to meet the situation that is really serious. By conference, work, thought and action. If we work together the retail merchant of this country will never be compelled to dip his colors to the chain or cutter.

Every city, town and village has its percentage of people whose patronage is controlled by price. That percentage is not overly large and can be reduced if we force quality with fair price and service forward. It is my belief that the over-head of the chain is as great as the wholesaler, and even the latter's salesmen expense is no greater than the supervision, spotters and division superintendent of the chain. If we had the nerve to believe it, a good live grocer has his goods laid down as cheaply as the chain stores have theirs. If there is a slight difference, and it must be slight, it can easily be overcome if the wholesaler is relieved of excess open accounts. To my mind it is an even break up to this point—the retailer. Right here the retailer is asked to measure his ability with the cleverest in the business; and when a real, live merchant meets this competition we find that he is doing the business of his career and making money in direct competition with the chain. If the retailer will realize that he has in the chain the keenest men in the business as competitors, and would set himself to meet it, he would find many avenues open to help him. He would find manufacturers helping him and making it more difficult for the chain to be supplied with goods now used in their headlines. If the real truth was known, many manufacturers are against supplying the chain with their goods to be footballed and cut for purpose of advertising. In fact, in many instances, the chain is only supplied to-day by so-called wholesalers who are so short-sighted as to permit a paltry 1 per cent. to cover their vision of disaster and failure to the retailer, as will surely come if they are permitted to continue to play the retailer double. Where the chains are beaten by the manufacturer, by court decisions and ruled against by every fair-minded business man, they are being supplied with the goods that could not be secured in any other way by these men, who are working under the double guise of merchant and broker, selling the chains at 1 per cent. and the retailer at 8 to 10 per cent. profit. Let us awake to this danger unitedly and call upon the manufacturer to quarantine this so-called wholesaler, until his sense of justice is cleansed and the fight put on the level. Let a wholesaler be a wholesaler—not a broker. Let a broker be a broker and not a wholesaler; one or the other.

The chain has given the merchants of this country a splendid and costly lesson in directing attention to a deadly indifference of the retailer to his duty, and this indifference has been shared in a great measure by the jobber in his willingness to go along the line of least resistance while it is profitable for him. The time of awakening is here. Let us confer together—set our house in order and get to work to prepare the

What Do You Think of This?

¶ We struck a grocer not long ago that wouldn't have anything but Wheatena on his own table, but wouldn't stock it because he thought he handled enough cereals!

¶ Could anything surpass the inconsistency of that? How many of his customers were as insistent about a cereal as he was about Wheatena?

¶ That really is typical of the way Wheatena gets and stays in. Packed and guaranteed quite differently from other cereals.

The victory is ours if we will have cleaner stores—stop over-buying, quicker turn-over of goods and accounts, with strict attention to our business and a live interest in the community in which we live.

Mr. Hewitt and all the other speakers were greatly pleased at the chance for retailers and wholesalers to get into closer co-operation. The president asked that Mr. Whitmarsh, in view of the fact that retailers could be benefited by the thoughts in his paper, read that part referring to chain stores.

Mr. Whitmarsh did so.

The next address was on "Store Management," by Mr. Engart, of Mitchell, Fletcher & Co., Philadelphia.

Mr. Engart's paper was as follows:—

STORE MANAGEMENT.

I believe we all realize that the retail grocery business is very different in these days from what it was twenty-five to thirty years ago—before the days of chain stores and grocery department stores—before the telephone came to reach you a dozen times a day to transmit another order, perhaps for an yeast cake forgotten, or to inquire at 11.10 what has become of "that order I left with you to be delivered at 11 o'clock?" and numberless other things that consume your time as well as your patience. In the old days, when I began my career in grocery life, the substantial people made weekly purchases, and frequently carried their supplies home with them. Profits were good and expenses light. We are facing new conditions now, having passed, or perhaps I should say, are passing through a long period during which prices seemed the most important factor in the purchase of foods, both from the standpoint of the consumer and the dealer.

I wish to touch briefly upon the question of expense under which a retail grocery operates to-day. The increase during the past fifteen to twenty years has been enormous. The consumer buys in smaller quantities, requiring that much more time, wrapping paper, string, boxes, packing, etc., in preparing the goods for delivery—also the delivery cost itself has increased, for not only once, but oftentimes two, three or even four times a day must deliveries be made, and it must be done quickly to please. Then we have salesmen to call upon the trade, to solicit their orders—another addition to the expense sheet.

Telephone service is another item in the list, though undoubtedly an integral part of business to-day, these expenses, however, are entirely necessary to give the service expected from the up-to-date grocer. It is and must be the endeavor of the grocer to keep down his operating expenses to the minimum, while keeping the qualities of his goods and his service up to standards.

Under the pressure of changing conditions in the grocery business, the weaker men have dropped by the wayside, and in the main, the survivors are men who, open-eyed, have bravely faced conditions as they were, and intelligently and persistently studied the various phases in the merchandising of foods.

The chain store has become a prominent factor in the distribution of foodstuffs, in operating on the two-fold plan of supplying for cash at a minimum price and locating numerous stores all over the sections of the large cities and suburbs, with the view of making it convenient for the housewife to call or send for her supplies—a saving of office and delivery expenses for the chain system. For a number of years this plan of doing business was strictly adhered to, but recently, with possibly the desire to get more of the trade of the larger consumer, they have added the delivery of goods to their former scope, so they are now facing somewhat the same conditions confronting all grocers, chained or otherwise—namely, heavy operating expenses. Having this element to contend with, they are not so strongly competitive with the individual grocer as before. I believe the opportunities are greater and wider today for the wideawake grocer, one who is growing up with the business, and gives it his best thought and effort.

One great asset in our business is service, and service we all know means prompt attention to all the requirements and wishes of our customers. It probably embraces all that the customer can possibly ask of you, and sometimes more than you can give. The public, however, want service and are generally willing to pay for it, if you are in a position to give it. You must not forget that service costs money, and do not make the mistake many have made of giving this service without a fair compensation. A failure to recognize this fact is seen in a poor balance sheet at the end of the year.

It is my experience that the grocer who appreciates this fact has the opportunity, plus his personality, to ignore to a great extent price cutting without service. He will have nothing to fear from competition of this character. A friend of mine, not connected with the grocery business, related to me a few months since a little experience of his own. He said that his business was not flourishing at the time, and in talking over the matter with his wife, they decided to try to economize by transferring their trade from one of our leading grocery houses to the chain store in their neighborhood. A strict account of their expenditures was carefully kept for two months, when they found they could save very little money and were receiving practically no service—so promptly went back to their former grocer, convinced that the service and uniform quality of the goods more than offset the extremely slight amount of money saved.

One thing for which we are all thankful is the passage of the pure food law, which has practically reduced to nil the adulteration of food products.

In my judgment a good buyer is one who studies very carefully the requirements of his particular business. It has been said "goods properly purchased are half sold," which simply means that when goods are properly selected and the price is as low as goods of that quality will warrant, then it is comparatively easy to make sales. To the buyer I would say—study the tastes of your customers, familiarize yourself with the qualities of the goods that are constantly being offered—post yourself as to market conditions—and one of the very best sources of information is through the salesmen who are calling upon you from the jobbers, the brokers and packers. Treat them courteously, and give them some of your time. They will make it profitable for you in many ways, both directly and indirectly. Have your mind always open for information.

A manufacturer a few days since told me an experience one of his brokers had in one of our Middle Western cities. This city has two large leading grocery houses. On one of them he had called, was courteously received and very satisfactory business relations were established. He then called upon the other grocer, and the buyer told him in a most harsh and brusque way that he declined to look at the article offered or listen to his proposition. In a short time after the demands came from the customers of this house for the article. They wrote direct to the factory requesting a shipment, and asking the lowest prices. They were quoted a much higher price than the other house paid, almost prohibitive, in fact, and requested to get their supplies from their neighboring grocer.

Many a good thing has been turned down because the buyer did not take time to look thoroughly into the proposition, and unfortunately, many a poor thing has been taken on for the same reason. But after you have made your purchases, have confidence in the goods, and always make a selling price which will cover your expense in carrying on the business and leave a proper profit. Some one told me a few days since that he saw in one of the California newspapers these pregnant words, "You must sell at a profit or quit the game."

Notwithstanding the assistance of the pure food laws, it is still necessary that the buyer of groceries be a discriminating purchaser and a judge of flavors and qualities. It does not absolutely follow that because an article is pure and satisfies all the requirements of the food laws it is high grade. In other words, there are many qualities and many grades, and it is up to the bright, intelligent buyer to select such goods as will in his judgment and agreeable to his experience, please his most particular customers.

While the purchasing of the goods is important in every sense of the word, the selling of them is equally so. It is a case of fifty-fifty. The goods must be attractively displayed in the store, which store must be kept scrupulously clean. Much attention is paid in this present day to the hygiene of the store—goods must be protected from dust, flies, etc., and everything must look neat and clean, and there is this point to remember, the only way to make them look neat and clean is to keep them clean and neat. Another important point is the atmosphere of the store. Your clerks must be taught to greet properly the customers when they come in, or are called up on the phone. Clerks should be courteous and attentive, and plainly indicate that nothing is too much trouble, if it will please the customer, though that customer may be unreasonably exacting. There are such customers, we grocers know. Let the clerk bear in mind that for the moment the customer is the only person on earth. It has been your experience, I am sure, that it does not pay to have an argument with your customer, when a claim is made for the non-delivery of an article on their order, or that the quality of certain goods is not satisfactory. The best thing to do is to allow cheerfully the claim, and investigate later. It generally follows if a good customer makes a claim that is not fair, when the error is discovered later, restitution will be made.

It generally follows that a store holding a customer referred to as exacting can always please those of a reasonable temperament.

Great care should be exercised in the selection of your salesmen and clerks. They should be instructed in the rudiments as well as the ethics of the business—they must be honest, have knowledge of the grades and qualities of the goods stocked, so that they can intelligently present them to the customer. Many an opportunity for "landing" a customer has been lost through the stupidity, ignorance or incompetence of the salesman. It has been my observation that a salesman who is not well informed, invariably follows the line of least resistance and calls the attention of those upon whom he is waiting to only such goods as he is acquainted with, thus failing in efficiency. The old grocer who always has his ov label goods the handiest on th knew the failing of the aver so while he instructed them sist upon customers taking pri knew that his men would ofte ent the private brand, because first to meet the eye, the easi hand to reach. Salesmen in have great opportunities for b your business when they fully importance of these matters, vital to the success of your they are at the same time in increasing their own value a ness to the business.

Question.—What is the thod to use to secure the ip of the retailer?
er (By Mr. Patterson).— six years ago after ten perience as retailers we attempted to start a wholesale grocery business. We had a hard pull for it was held against us that we had been retailers. We never have allowed sales to anybody but retailers since we have been in the wholesale business. As a matter of principle we do not take from our stock groceries for our own table; we buy from our local retailers and feel that the profit we are giving the retailer in our custom is more than offset by the good will we gain through this policy. Our entire force co-operates with us for they know the private policy of the members of the firm.

It makes me angry when a manufacturer comes to me and says: "We're spending such an amount in advertising these goods and you should therefore sell it." They could have used part of that money in educating the retailer—in giving the retailer a little larger profit. I won't sell goods that do not pay the retailer a sufficient profit.

"I advocate the Stevens bill. We've got to get down to the fact that the retailers' interests are ours; that when we help them we are helping ourselves."

Seventh Question.—Should a retailer adopt a delivery schedule and make deliveries only at certain hours? What about co-oerative delivery?

Answer (By Mr. Smedley).—Some towns have co-operative delivery from a central station. I am told it has been successful. It would depend on the size of the town. A large town could not conduct co-operative delivery as well as a smaller.

By Mr. Moyer.—Co-operative delivery depends on the size of the town. In the small town it is not good; in the large town it works.

By Mr. Engart, Philadelphia.—If your business is large enough it will pay you to establish delivery hours for the reason that you can give better service in the end at smaller cost. However, it is sometimes policy where a customer cannot wait for the scheduled delivery to make a special trip, I think.

By Mr. Davis, Altoona, formerly a retailer.—I have found that scheduled hours for deliveries saved me the price of one team. My customers were satisfied for I conferred with them before I established my schedule. We sent out full loads at 9, 11, 2 and 4 o'clock.

By Mr. Fischer, president of Retailers' Association of Reading.—I do it successfully.

Eighth Question.—Do you believe it good business policy for a retailer to sell goods at cost or less than cost?

Answers unanimous.—Best way to get out of business.

Mr. Smedley told in this connection of a boy who came to his mother very much battered up.

Mama said.—Tommy, you've been fighting.

Tommy.—No, Mama, I just bet Johnny that I could lean out of the window further than he could and I won.

Ninth Question.—What is the best method by which a retailer can keep track of his stock in individual lines?

Answer (By Arjay Davies).—When I was in the retail business I had a book in which I entered in red ink every item that came into my stock. Every day I marked down the number of each article sold, thus being able at any time to compute the amount of stock on hand. The red figures also showed how long each order lasted and determined the quantity to be ordered next time for a given period.

Tenth Question.—Is a retailer playing fair when he ignores the jobber when buying rapidly moving staples, yet depending on the jobber to supply the slower selling articles?

Answer (By Mr. Fischer).—No. It is not co-operation. He should not buy direct.

Eleventh Question.—Should a jobber continue to sell a retailer who has retired from business?

Answer (By Mr. Davies).—No. I had such a request this week and turned it down.

Twelfth Question.—What is the difference between that question and the jobber supplying restaurants, hotels and boarding houses?

Answer (By Mr. Smedley).—In Philadelphia we decided that restaurants were in the class with dealers for they bought goods to sell again.

By Mr. Littlehale.—If that is so, why should not the hotel give a rebate to the retail grocer?

By Mr. Goodrich.—We think it wrong to sell to the boarding house or to the hotel direct.

By Mr. Knoll.—I feel the jobber is justified in selling to restaurants and hotels.

Thirteenth Question.—What is the attitude of the Wholesale Grocers' Association toward trading stamps?

Answer (By Mr. Smedley).—The Supreme Court has decided that the States have a right to tax trading stamps, coupons, etc. I presume that the Pennsylvania Legislature will be asked to pass a tax bill on trading stamps. What would be the attitude of the wholesale grocer on that subject?

By Mr. Davis.—I think it would be a good thing to tax trading stamps in this way, for no individual retailer gets any benefit out of trading stamps where each retailer gives stamps. If a tax were placed on stamps there wouldn't be so many sold.

By Mr. Fischer, Reading Pa.—The State of Washington and two other States have been upheld in licensing trading stamps. This is the sort of thing to prevent stamp people being so liberal, forcing them to do business on a business basis. Undoubtedly such a condition is in our favor.

Mr. Drake was called upon for his views on the question. He protested that he could not speak intelligently as his firm had nothing whatever to do with trading stamps of any kind. "In all our 80 years' of business we've considered ourselves merchants, not premium dealers," he said.

By a Wholesaler.—The drift of the subjects taken up in this convention is to reduce the cost of doing business. It is certainly our business to do all we can to wipe out trading stamps. The life of the retailer depends upon reducing the cost of doing business, and trading stamps increase that cost.

Fourteenth Question (not really a question, however, merely a suggestion).—In these times of cash and Economy stores, where the consumer spends cash when he has it, and goes to the grocer begging credit when he is out of it, there never has been a more relief needed than now from a growing evil. Therefore every retailer should do all he can to push the garnishee act.

Let's get together through the Chamber of Commerce and all other possible channels to put the garnishee act through.

(No comments.)

Mr. Nowland, of Fels & Co., was called to the platform and spoke warmly along these lines:—

The decision of the Supreme Court yesterday as to trading stamps is one of the most important in the interest of the retailer that has been passed in a long time. Tracing the trading stamp business to its origin will show the harm it has done to retail merchants in all lines. Retail merchants' associations have been unable to get any redress despite endeavors to get helpful legislation until this decision of the Supreme Court.

The trading stamp companies have undoubtedly made millions of dollars out of you retail merchants. Ask yourselves if any of you have been benefited. The original idea was to help you do a cash business. Did it help you? No. Because you gave credit customers the same number of trading stamps when they finally paid you.

If you follow up the decision of the Supreme Court in this State and have a trading stamp license imposed every retailer in all lines will be helped. If each State will do this there is no question but what a national law can be passed, and then it will not be necessary for you to give 1½ to 3 per cent. to get cash purchases.

Then it will not be long before there will be legislation against coupons of all kinds—allowing all to do business as merchants on business principles, and the entire community will be benefited.

The session then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, 8.15 P. M.

Hon. William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, Washington, D. C., was welcomed and talked to the association for an hour on the interesting work of his department, suggesting that the wholesale grocers call on it for any help they needed. He called his department an engine of helpfulness.

THURSDAY, 2.30 P. M.

Food Commissioner Foust was the first speaker. He talked only a short time, mainly on the improvement in the canning industry. He said that 125 brands of ketchup were recently examined by Dr. Chas. LaWall and not one was found that did not comply with all pure food laws.

Mr. Foust commended the jobbers in their efforts to educate retailers and placed the blame on the latter where such things as raisins were found unfit for food, the cause being the unclean retail store.

Mr. Foust suggested that the wholesaler had it in his hands to exterminate the sale of adulterated vinegar, for, if the jobber insists on buying only pure apple vinegar, the retailer has nothing else to do but handle the high grade product. The jobber can pay 12 cents a gallon, sell for 16 cents and the retailer resell for 25 cents, giving everyone a fair profit.

Mr. S. L. Stix next delivered his address.

Mr. Stix's address was as follows:—

LEGISLATION OR NO LEGISLATION.

What can we adopt as an immediate programme to meet present conditions?

What is the most important problem the wholesale grocer has before him today? The same problem that is causing no end of trouble for the manufacturer, i. e., how can the independent retailer be kept in existence? That's our problem, that's the manufacturer's problem, that's the independent retailer's problem. We are all in the same boat. The wholesaler cannot exist as such without the independent retailer; the average independent retailer cannot exist without the wholesaler; and, in the final analysis, without such distributors, the business of most manufacturers of grocery specialties is seriously threatened.

And what is it that is threatening the life of the independent retailer. The chain store system. Now, if the chain store system represents any real economy to the consumer, it is here to stay, and we might as well try to make water run up hill as to attempt to arrest its progress. But does it represent any real economy? The average chain store, even taking for granted that it buys at practically the same cost as the jobber, but taking into consideration that it also has to duplicate much of the service the jobber performs before its merchandise is delivered to its retail stores, possibly owns its goods delivered in its retail branches at about 5 per cent. less than the average independent retailer.

The personality of the owner behind the counter certainly is a sufficient offset for such a meagre cost disadvantage. When it comes to delivery service or the extending of credit, the independent can give them or not, as he chooses, and simply charge accordingly, the same as the chain operator is now doing. If these are facts, how shall we account for this development and rapid growth of the chain stores. It seems more or less like a joke for me to come here to discuss this problem with you, who have given this matter so much thought, but your aggressive president and able secretary have apparently read their Bibles and believe that wisdom may sometimes even "flow out of the mouths of babes and sucklings." I suppose that let's me in.

In my opinion, the chain stores primarily owe their success to their practice of cutting the price of popular proprietary products. By selling such goods at cost, and sometimes even under cost, they give the consumer the false impression that he can buy from the chain stores at a saving of 25 to 30 per cent. If the consumer really knew how slight, if any, the actual saving was, he probably would prefer to continue dealing with the independent.

The passage of the Stevens-Ayres Bill would go a long way toward cleaning up the whole trouble. But as this bill is only permissive and not compulsory, even if passed, it is quite possible that a great many manufacturers would not see fit to avail themselves of its provisions.

So while waiting for this legislative relief, what can we do to help meet the situation?

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

When I attended your convention at Scranton I had the pleasure of listening to the splendid address given by Mr. Simmonds, in which he outlined how in the hardware trade his firm, for their own self-preservation, had found it necessary to educate the retailer. That's what we have to do. Not only do we have to show him the necessity of proper display of merchandise (which was the particular service feature that Mr. Simmonds dwelt upon), cleanliness, prompt and efficient service, unfailing politeness, careful accounting, etc., but we also have to teach him the psychology of prices.

Where the manufacturer of a heavily advertised specialty refuses to make any attempt to establish fair market conditions, it is simply up to the independent retailer to take a leaf out of the book of the chain store man and meet him at his own game. The independents doing a cash and non-delivery business are as a rule holding their own very well, because they are meeting the chain store man, and sometimes even going him one better, but the independent grocer doing a delivery and charge account business knows he cannot afford to attempt to sell as cheap as the non-service chain stores, and frequently continues to charge regular prices for all these proprietary products.

On account of the extra service that such a grocer gives, he certainly cannot sell as cheaply as the non-service stores, but by shading unprotected advertised 10-cent items to, say, 9 cents, or occasionally to 8 cents, it takes the sting out of the 8-cent or occasional 7-cent price of the Economy store. He should charge this reduced price as a matter of course, without making any noise about it. He will ask you how he can afford to do this? Tell him to investigate what percentage of his sales consist of proprietary products.

Statistics I have obtained indicate that on the average, such products only represent 10 per cent. of the total volume, running somewhat lower than this in the better class of city stores and somewhat higher in country stores.

A cut of 10 per cent. on 10 per cent. of volume would make a difference of 1 per cent. in actual profits, if all other factors remained unchanged, but clever pricing will result in more business and an increase or saving of only 10 per cent. in volume would probably more than make good this 1 per cent. loss.

My reason for making this statement is as follows: The average retail gross profit runs from 20 to 25 per cent. Based on a 22 per cent. average, if a 10 per cent. increase in business added nothing to the expense account, the net increase in profit on the whole business would be 2 per cent., so it is fair to assume that an increased volume of 10 per cent., other factors being equal, would at least yield 1 per cent. increase in net profits and would probably yield more.

As the average retail plant is operated far below its maximum capacity, and as the retailer would not find it necessary to cut on all of the 10 per cent. volume of proprietary business, a careful study of the possibilities of intelligent pricing would save many a retailer and make the future of the chain store approximate more closely to its real economic advantage to the community.

The thought will undoubtedly suggest itself to you that we jobbers should help along the good cause by selling these cut items at a concession. In New York we have so many competitors who do this and who seem to find much joy and profit in doing it, that it is unnecessary for us to worry about this detail, but in such Utopian jobbing centers as we understand prevail in Tri-State territory, this part of the problem may be well worthy of your consideration.

But to be serious, we jobbers are not dealing with consumers, but with merchants who know the value of their merchandise and who do not judge or mis-judge us based on the price we quote on a staple here and there. The consumer cannot of necessity be similarly well posted on all the different items bought by the average householder, and, therefore, he is naturally deceived by this bait prices.

As I see it, we have to teach the independent to meet fire with fire. It's a battle of wits and it's up to us to give our customers the benefit of our advice and experience, not only for their sakes, if you please, but for our own sakes as well.

Discussion.—Mr. Smedley was called on to say something upon the subject of the retailers' cutting prices on proprietary brands to meet the methods of chain stores.

Mr. Smedley disapproved of such a course as being the road to demoralizing business. He thinks the retailer's weapon is personality. The problem is to educate the independent merchant to know the power of his personality.

Mr. Carl Lautz, president of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, then spoke.

Mr. Lautz's address was as follows:—

SPECIALTY ORDERS.

The principal purpose of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association is to standardize the grocery specialty order transaction.

The specialty order is the breath of life—the essence of such merchandising. To conduct an efficient business it is necessary that there be a genuine order, economically and fairly secured, promptly filled and delivery exactly accepted, promoting the maximum distribution at the minimum cost.

It is estimated that prior to the organization of this association nearly one-half of the specialty orders were never filled—a condition imposing great loss upon the manufacturer as well as the jobber. The entire transaction was disorganized and at fault.

Improper methods of salesmanship were often used by specialty salesmen. Misrepresentation and other questionable devices were used to induce a purchase. The retail dealer often cancelled the orders given or refused their delivery. The confidence of the wholesale grocer in the genuine character of the specialty order was destroyed, and such orders were often either ignored entirely or referred to the wholesale salesman for reconfirmation—frequently resulting in cancellation or substitution.

One bad condition promoted another in a never ending circle of unfair and destructive dealing and matters were rapidly passing more and more beyond control, constituting a serious menace to the grocery specialty business. Some corrective influence was imperative. To meet this situation the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association was formed.

After a careful analysis of the situation the association instituted an active and earnest educational campaign to correct these inimical conditions, the sole corrective medium employed being education, an appeal to reason, fairness and good business judgment. No other means have been employed to date and no other means will be employed in the future. Although the process of education is slow, we feel confident that in the end it will succeed.

The Association Plan for improving the trade conditions and standardizing the grocery specialty order transaction included three major steps:—

First.—A stamp was adopted and imprinted upon all specialty orders of our members, guaranteeing the genuineness of the order upon which it appears.

By the use of this stamp the manufacturer notifies and requires of his salesmen that every order taken must be genuine. The retail dealer is being educated to a recognition and acceptance of the fact that such an order obligates him, both legally and morally, to accept delivery pursuant to the terms of the order, while the wholesale grocer is assured of the genuineness of the transaction.

We feel that great progress has been made along this line and that the wholesale grocer to-day recognizes the fact that the specialty orders bearing the stamp of our association are bona fide and genuine. While we do not claim that the crooked salesman has been entirely eliminated, we do claim that this is so nearly true that irregular orders are so few and far between as to be hardly worth taking into consideration.

Second.—The second major step was the perfection of an agreement with the wholesale grocers generally throughout the country, under the terms of which the jobber agreed to deliver promptly all orders accepted by him—without reconfirmation.

Although a very large percentage of the jobbers throughout the country rigidly live up to this agreement, we feel that we have not made as much progress along this line as seems desirable. Perhaps this is because of the fact that the jobbers who still refer orders back to their salesmen consider the arrangement one-sided.

A careful analysis of the situation, however, ought to convince any fair-minded man that the interest in the specialty order is mutual and that turning orders over to the salesmen for reconfirmation is a detriment both to the jobber as well as the manufacturer.

In the first place, when a specialty order is turned over to the jobbers' salesmen, which has been duly passed by the credit department, it puts the stamp of suspicion upon the specialty salesman, which, under the circumstances existing to-day, we feel is not justified.

In the second place, it teaches your salesman to disregard both the legal and moral aspect of a contract. If you permit your salesman to allow the retailer to cancel his specialty order, the day will come when that retailer, taking advantage of the situation, will cancel purchases made through your own men and against which you have laid in a stock.

Having taught the retailer that the specialty order, duly signed by him, carries no obligation with it, he will be unable to see why a similar transaction made directly with you should not be treated in the same way.

In the third place, turning orders over to your salesmen for reconfirmation frequently results in a direct loss to the jobber. This is not so much the case with standard goods as with new goods, or goods that move slowly out of your stock.

The specialty man comes along and turns over orders for fourteen or fifteen cases of a new brand. Out of the goodness of your heart your buyer gives him an order for fifteen cases to cover the retail orders turned in and accepted. Then what happens? The orders are turned back to the jobbers' salesmen for confirmation. In calling upon his trade he says, "Bill, you don't want this stuff; why don't you sell the old brand?" Order No. 1 is cancelled, and so it goes.

In the meantime, the fifteen cases purchased for your stock arrive and are placed on your floor. The greater part of the orders, through the benign influence of your salesmen, have been cancelled. Finally, inventory day comes. You find that you have a lot of odds and ends on hand which you must dispose of at less than cost. Here you make a direct loss through turning back the orders to the salesmen for mation.

It seems to me, therefore, t agreement which you have sign this association to deliver prom orders accepted by you—without firmation of your own men, is of protection and should be stric forced by you.

Third.—The third major ste
by this association was the form

9.—Resolved, That we recognize the great worth of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and appreciate the benefits derived by all wholesale grocers.

Resolved, That we urge the small percentage of our members who are not members of the National to join and give their moral and financial support in appreciation of favors that they are already receiving through the activities of the National, which are for the good of all.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the secretary of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

11.—Whereas, The interests of the retail and wholesale grocers are identical; and

Whereas, Many trade evils have arisen inimical to the interests of both; Resolved, That we indorse a closer co-operation between the retailer and wholesaler as a means of combating such influences.

Resolved, That we express our appreciation to the retail grocers of Reading for their generous attendance at our convention and thank them for the sacrifices made in our behalf, and trust that this is only the beginning of a closer bond of sympathy between these two great branches of the commercial world.

12.—Resolved, That we reaffirm our interests in the Stevens-Ayers Fair Trade Bill and urge our members to support and work for its passage.

13.—Whereas, It is the custom of many manufacturers to give to retailers free goods based on a percentage of their purchases; and

Whereas, The retailer's cost is frequently less than the jobber's; and

Whereas, This creates not only unfair, but humiliating competition, as such retailers frequently resell a portion of their purchases at less than jobbers pay for the goods; and

Whereas, Some jobbers will create "fictitious sales" for obvious purposes, thereby seriously injuring the jobber who tries to play fair with the manufacturer; therefore be it

Resolved, That we again express our emphatic disapproval of free deals of all descriptions, but if the manufacturer feels that such a policy will benefit his business, we ask that no partiality be shown to any particular class of buyers.

14.—Whereas, Wholesale grocers in convention (local, State and national) have for many years been voicing their disapproval of some manufacturers subsidizing their salesmen, or attempting to do so; and

Whereas, An apparently increasing number are practicing this obnoxious policy; therefore be it

Resolved, That we reaffirm the fifth object of this association, which reads as follows:—

"To have business conducted on legitimate lines, discourage 'deals,' 'schemes' and the subsidizing of jobbers' employees by manufacturers."

15.—Resolved, We reaffirm our interest in the campaign for the adoption by the Government of 1-cent postage on first-class mail matter.

16.—Resolved, We support the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and the National Canners' Association in their efforts to obtain a better shipping container.

17.—Whereas, F. I. D., No. 156, relating to walnuts in sacks and cases in package form reads as follows: "In view of the fact that doubts have existed as to whether or not walnuts, packed in sacks and cases in which they are customarily offered for inportation into the United States or are shipped in interstate commerce, are in package form within the meaning of the net weight amendment to the Federal Food and Drugs Act, importers and other persons are notified that on and after May 1, 1916, walnuts in such sacks and cases which are not marked plainly and conspicuously with the quantity of the contents will be deemed to be misbranded. Foreign shippers should be advised accordingly."

Resolved, That our members be warned that this will probably lead to a ruling on all nuts and that our members take cognizance in placing their contracts for the fall crop.

18.—Resolved, We desire to call to the attention of the new administration the suggestions made in the secretary's report that the chairmen of the Local Zone Meetings make a report at each annual meeting; and further

Resolved, That the holding of zone institutes for the purpose of furthering the cause of co-operation of our members with the retail dealers along educational lines, as suggested by our secretary, be encouraged.

19.—Resolved, We urge our members if necessary to change their accounting system so as to enable them to furnish the Cost Accounting Committee with the figures desired.

Mr. Fred. R. Drake led the talks on the future of the grocery business, speaking optimistically.

Mr. F. B. Reeves said his three sons were speaking of their ambitions. One wished to be a farmer, the second a civil engineer, and the third decided to be a wholesale grocer, that he might be able to help the two "sad birds" when they were down and out.

Mr. Davies mentioned the specialty order difficulty again and said that it was in the jobbers' hands to insist on his legitimate profit on every order.

Mr. Bursk spoke lovingly of Mr. Graves' usefulness and proposed three cheers to him. Mr. Graves was quite overwhelmed when the cheers were repeated.

Next came the subject of the location for the eleventh convention.

Mr. Nowland represented the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers with an invitation to entertain the wholesalers at a banquet in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel if they would hold their next convention in Philadelphia.

Mr. Hewitt thanked Mr. Nowland for the generous invitation, but referred the matter to the proper committee.

Mr. Zeidler objected to the Wholesale Association's not providing its own banquet.

The following officers were elected: President, Arjay Davies, of the H. G. Tombler Grocery Co., Easton, Pa.; first vice-president, John T. Porter, of the John T. Porter Co., Scranton, Pa.; second vice-president, J. H. Blackwell, of J. H. Blackwell & Co., Trenton, N. J.; third vice-president, J. Grant Schwarz, of Witmar-Schwarz Co., Harrisburg, Pa.; treasure, C. Y. Fox, Githens, Rexsamer & Co., Philadelphia.

A rising vote of thanks was given in closing to Mr. James Hewitt, the retiring president, and the convention adjourned.

The banquet on Thursday evening concluded the convention, former President James Hewitt being toastmaster and the following being speakers: Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania, Judge H. D. Schaeffer of Reading, Fred. Mason, vice-president Shredded Wheat Co., and Hon. A. G. Dewalt, of Allentown, Pa.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market has been unmarked by any special incident during the week, except another advance of 1 cent a pound in India-Ceylon. This is due to the same causes that have caused previous advances. Other lines of tea are unchanged, but with a very firm feeling. The consumptive demand is good.

Coffee.

The coffee market is firm and active. No actual change can be quoted in Rio or Santos, but the market is firm and particularly the option, or speculative, market has shown several slight advances during the week. The feeling is undoubtedly strong. Milds are unchanged, but comparatively high. Mocha is a shade weaker and Java firm and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market has continued to soar during the week. All refiners are asking 6.65 cents for granulated and the highest quotation on raws for the week is 5.39 cents. The Franklin Sugar Refining Co., of Philadelphia, is to reopen within a few weeks, and altogether a most remarkable demand for sugar is to be looked for. Some of it is intended for export, but the entire situation is very active and firm. The future is somewhat hard to predict, but it is hardly possible that prices will be any lower in the future. Consumptive demand is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup unchanged, seasonably active at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup remains very high and in light demand, except for mixing and manufacturing. Molasses unchanged; fairly active.

Fish.

There has been no particular change in mackerel during the week. Prices remain very high, with Norway Nos. 3, 4 and 5 almost out of the market. No particular demand has sprung up as yet on account of Lent. Stocks are still very light. Cod, hake and haddock are selling still at slight advance, possibly a quarter of a cent. Salmon is still in fair demand, at unchanged prices. Domestic sardines are very scarce and most holders are asking a shade more for for them than $2.50 for quarter oils. Imported sardines very scarce and very firm

Dried Fruits.

Dried fruits are rather unsettled, owing to the reported prohibition of shipments to England, but without feature or change in price.

Canned Goods.

The demand for spot tomatoes is very light and the market is showing a little weakness. Futures are not selling at all. Corn is in good demand; prices advancing. There is quite some demand for future corn. Peas are unchanged, but selling well. California canned fruits are moving freely, with no change in prices, but firmly held at former quotations. All lines of Baltimore canned goods are in seasonable demand, with no change in prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are in fair demand, at slightly lower prices. Marrows are selling slowly, but at full prices. No change in green or Scotch peas.

Butter.

The butter market is very active, with light receipts and a good consumptive demand, at prices ranging about 1 cent a pound higher than last week on all grades. The stock of storage butter is extremely light and a continued good market is expected, but without any change in price in the next few days. Print butter is very scarce and readily selling at outside prices.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs are increasing, and the quality is running average fancy. The consumptive demand is very good and absorbing all the receipts on arrival at the current rates, which are about the same as were ruling a week ago. No change is likely to occur from present conditions in the next few days.

Cheese.

The cheese market is quiet at unchanged prices, with a fair consumptive demand. The stocks are reported to be light. The market is in a healthy condition, but not likely to change.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is firm at prices averaging about a quarter cent higher than last week. Both pure and compound lard are firm, at an advance of half a cent over last week, with light stocks and a normal consumptive demand. Barreled pork is firm, with a good trade at 50 cents per barrel higher than a week ago. Dried beef and canned meats are having a normal consumptive demand at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Canned Salmon.

Spots—Season 1915.—The most noteworthy feature of the 1915 salmon season has been the heavy export demand, more canned salmon having been exported since January 1, 1916, than ever before in like period. This business comes at a time when the American trade is usually quiet. There is a great jolt coming to the American buyers when they try to buy spot salmon late this spring or early summer. The export movement was mostly on sockeye talls at $1.75 to $1.80 per dozen, and pinks at about 70 to 75 cents per dozen.

During this buying the water rates on the Atlantic advanced from 85 cents to $1.25 and $1.50 per 100 pounds. It stands to reason that if the foreign buyers can pay this additional amount for salmon in the form of transportation, that they could have paid a little more for the grades like pinks where the price was too low. It is pleasing to note, however, that there was no disposition on the part of the packers to take advantage of these foreign buyers.

England during 1914 and 1915 has taken 2,000,000 cases of salmon in addition to its usual requirements. The average annual importation into England during the last few years has been a million cases, whereas she took in 1914 over 2,100,000 cases, and in 1915 almost 2,200,000 cases of salmon.

As there is nothing ahead but high prices and short packs, packers will generally refrain from making prices until close to the time of actual deliveries.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There has been a real good demand for herrings of all kinds during the past week. For the first time in many months we have been asked by one of our shippers in Great Britain if we would advise a consignment of Yarmouth herrings. Heretofore they have told us that they had such a large demand for all kinds of salt herrings that they would not think of shipping any consignments to this country. Evidently this demand cannot be so strong as it was, otherwise they would not ask us to accept consignments of these herrings. Of course, those Yarmouth herrings can be sold here if they are of good quality, and if they can be sold at reasonable prices.

The Norway mackerel situation has also shown a further improvement during the past week. The demand is quite good, prices are very firmly held and stocks in first hands very much reduced. If the present demand continues, the end of Lent should also see the end of stocks of Norway mackerel.

Unfortunately, there has been no change for the better in the imported sardine situation. In Norway they continue to ask such enormously high prices for the few smoked sardines which they are able to pack that the American buyer is absolutely unable to import the goods at these high prices, and resell them to the trade here. Business in Norway smoked sardines has suffered very materially, owing to the high asking figures in Norway. Portugal, owing to a short catch, has hard work to supply the American market with a reasonable quantity of goods, and in spite of the decided scarcity, Portuguese sardines are still most reasonable in price. A few French sardines continue to come right along, although, of course, the quantity is so small that they have no influence on the market.

Rice.

The chronicle of the past week has lost some of the cheerful tone. Whether this is due to the bad weather and congested freight conditions, which seem to have struck the entire Eastern zone, or the fact that stocks in hands of the trade are heavier than anticipated, it is at all events self-evident that the demand has fallen down, without much outlook for improvement until the country is practically cleared of snow and transportation companies are in position to move freight promptly. However, the high grades still command full figures on account of their continued scarcity. The intermediate qualities go slow, although prices are on a fair basis and worthy of attention. Blue Rose is more active and stronger, as the trade are beginning to appreciate that they are worth while at prevailing quotations.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report conditions practically remain unchanged, although s tions show a slight improveme olinas are moving slowly.

At New Orleans the clean ket is very strong, with an tendency on all grades. Bro continue very scarce and in mand. There has been much tivity shown in medium Hond doubtedly due to the fact that relatively cheaper than Blue present prices.

We Appeal to the Grocer—We Do Not Try to Force Him

When we started to put Goldenoyle on the market, we could have gone to the consumer alone and tried to persuade her to force you to handle it.

We don't believe in that. We advertised to you before we advertised to anybody else, because we had confidence, and still have, that you can judge good merchandise on its merits, and will meet a manufacturer half way on a worthy proposition.

Goldenoyle is a good proposition from any standpoint. It is the most highly refined vegetable salad oil on the market—we say that from twenty-five years' experience as oil refiners. You remember what Prof. Allyn, the Westfield chemist, said about it.

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21¾ oz. each; and 1 doz. ½-gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful recipe book for retailers' customers.

How Much Would You Pay Mame a Week?

I don't know whether you fellows know it or not, but I'm one of the most peaceable little things that ever lived, if people don't pour coal oil in my whiskers.

I'll sit on the floor and play with my spools for hours and never bite a soul, if they let me alone.

But let 'em try to put things over on me—or let me think that's what they're trying to do—and by the great horn spoon, I'll yell till I split the blue sky.

I'm saying this to sort of excuse myself for what happened the other day in a department store basement in Philadelphia. I was home over Sunday and on Friday afternoon my wife put the ring in my nose and led me down town to where they take your wages away from you without pain or suffering. We got into several of the department stores and by and by my wife kicked me down stairs into the basement to get some candy.

"This is a hen of a place to come to for candy," I said, "if you want candy why don't you go to a candy store?"

"They have a special sale on today," she said. "I want to get some of that."

We walked a mile and a quarter to the east, then turned due north and just before we reached the north pole, the candy counter loomed up.

As usual, there was a bunch of people waiting to be tended to, and about half enough clerks to do it. That's one way in which the one-line storekeeper will always have it on the department store, and where the department store's competition can't ever reach him, and that's in the matter of help. You can go into the average candy store any time and find somebody to wait on you, but you can't seem to ever go in the department candy store without having to wait. Don't think people don't notice that.

Well, as I say, we waited with the rest. There was a clerk right near us, doing up a box, and while we stood there waiting for her to get through, a flip little thing came up and called "Hello Mame" to her. She wasn't a clerk, understand, but a girl from outside.

I saw what was coming. When Mame got through she didn't come for us, as it was up to her to do, but she started in to get what her friend wanted.

"Here, we was here first!" I said, not in any whisper either.

"Oh shut up!" said my wife, red as fire, "don't start anything here."

By that time I had kicked off both shoes and was ready to dive in, as it were.

"Why don't you wait on us first and this girl second?" I said again. "We was here before she was and you know it."

"Just a minute," says Mame.

"No, not just a minute or just a second," I said, and I was just going to tell her in a few well chosen words what I thought of her as a clerk, when a floor walker pattered over and asked what the trouble was. I told him and he went up and talked to Mame. Then he came over and said:—

"She'll wait on you right away." But Mame had another one to put over on us before she went to bed. By that time she was over getting her friend's box wrapped and the change. You know as a rule they take the package and the money over and while it's being fixed up they'll come back and wait on somebody else. Not so friend Mame. So's her chum wouldn't have to waste a minute she waited for her change.

When she finally came over to where we were, my wife told what she wanted and Mame started in to get it. She was one of these greasy-haired dames that never looks appetizing about the head, and while she stood waiting for her friend's change I saw her scratch her head twice.

When she started to dig up our candy with her bare hands my little tummy began to work, but I think I'd have gotten through it all right if she hadn't scratched again. Then it was all over.

"For the love of Mike!" I said, "either scratch your head or dig up our candy! Don't try to do both!"

My wife pulled my coat so fierce that it ain't fit right since, and Mame got very red. Blame i if she didn't scratch it aga don't think she knew she wa to do it—she was simply all up.

That didn't mean any ex me, and when she had the b I poured over.

Did You Ever Try to Sell a Thing to Keep the Dust Down When a Woman Sweeps?—You can't water a carpet before you sweep it, nor you can't sweep it as it is, because a lot of the stuff you raise settles right back again. But the sweeping powder catches this dust and holds it there.

You sprinkle a little ridge along the store floor and commence to sweep—you yourself illustrate how the work should be done at home. It's a fairly profitable article to push and is really a sensible thing for a woman to use.

One Way to Lose an Order—Is to be a little high on one item, say, sugar, and stick to it. For instance, a woman at the head of a big family of healthy eaters comes in from the country. She figures on spending something like $25 for groceries. She has the low price of sugar down pat—that's the item that sticks out. The man that has the price gets the $25.

It's your duty not to lose a customer like that if it's in your power to get her. Your selling price on granulated may be $6.75 a cwt. You're not supposed to cut that. But you are supposed to state a case to the management where the cutting of it w more business.

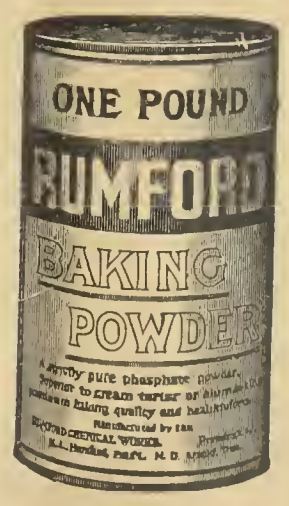
Trial by Jury for Baking Powder

A good way to convince yourself on the baking powder question is to give a sample of the leading brands, Rumford among them, to some good cook—your wife, say—and tell her to try them and say which is the best.



Trial by jury as applied to baking powder—we're willing to submit Rumford to it any time.

If you try this, you might say to your "jury" that there is nothing in Rumford but the nutritious phosphates, starch and soda, all of which add to the wholesomeness of the food.

Rumford Baking Powder has always been profitable merchandise to the grocer.

RUMFORD CHEMICAL WORKS
Providence, R. I.

No. 354.—You Can't Alter a Contract or an Order With Small Type Provisions Printed Somewhere Else.

My attention has been called to a case which has just been decided, and which certainly touches very closely a business practice which has come to be extremely general—that of printing something in small type on letter heads or order blanks which is supposed to be read into a contract. It invariably is done to afford one of the parties a loophole of escape if escape becomes desirable. The case I refer to decides that this cannot be legally done. Unless the provision is actually incorporated in the body of the contract or in the order, it will not be considered a part of it.

This is really more important and far-reaching than it looks. If this view of the law is adopted by other courts, it would necessitate a reformation in the business methods of literally hundreds of business houses.

The case in question was a New York case and concerned a contract to do certain work. It was executed by the branch manager of one of the parties, and the other party, who had also signed it, had started to do the work, when he was called off, on the ground that the contract had to be approved by the Board of Directors before it was effective. The Directors, as a matter of fact, turned it down.

The ground on which the party in question based his right to reject a contract which had been executed and partly performed, was the following matter, printed in very small type on the bottom of its letter head:—

> All agreements are contingent upon strikes, fire, accidents or delays beyond our control. All prices are subject to change without notice, and all contracts and orders taken are subject to the approval of the executive office.

The matter got into the courts, and the court decided that no small type provision like this could be considered part of the contract, even though the contract was written, as it was, on the very letter head that the above was printed on. The court's reasoning was as follows:—

> In view of the manner in which its provision is printed upon the stationery of the plaintiff, it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that it was incorporated in and a part of the proposal. The language of the proposal is clear and explicit, and this provision, which is printed in small type, cannot be assumed to change, alter or modify it, unless it is a part of the proposal. It was not incorporated in the body of the proposal or referred to in it. * * * When an offer, proposal or contract is expressed in clear and explicit terms, matter printed in small type at the top or bottom of the office stationery of the writer, where it is not easily seen, which is not in the body of the instrument or referred to therein, is not necessarily to be considered as a part of such offer, proposal or contract.

In other words, if I draw a contract, complete in itself, on a piece of paper, which bears, apart from the contract, and in small type, a provision which would modify or change the contract or order, I cannot take advantage of it because it is not part of the contract. If I want to take advantage of it I must put it in the contract. Being printed on the same paper is not enough.

As I say, this practice of trying to tie a string to contracts or orders is growing exceedingly common. Only the other day while I was sitting in court a lawyer tried to argue that some words printed on a bill head, restricting the making of claims to a certain period, was a part of a contract that had been made between the parties some time before that. The point was that one party to the suit had made a claim after the period expired. The court ruled that the contract was complete when made and the matter on the bill head could not be considered part of it.

A very large number of firms now use order blanks on which in small type in the heading or at the foot, appears some statement that "all orders are subject to"—something, usually strikes, or crop failures, or a long list of other things. If this matter is to be considered part of a contract, it is really not a contract at all, but only a contract if one party can and will perform it.

I have seen quite a number of contracts or orders in which, in small type, was printed matter as to shipment, which would have practically allowed the seller to ship whenever he liked, although the contract itself provided a definite time for shipment. That might easily nullify the contract as to the buyer.

The legal moral of all this is that under the law every provision which belongs to the contract or the contract must go phys the contract or it will not sidered. I include in "cont ordinary order for mer Verbal understandings abo not be brought up after the is signed, if they are not in printed provisions, as appe the above case, can not be up if they appear separate contract and wholly detac it. One party to a contra right to believe that the w which he is putting his na whole contract, and the that it isn't incumbent o go hunting about into othe matter to see if there is s there which affects him.

salaries, traveling men, etc. At the end of the year if they have what we call 2 per cent. net profit they have done well. These listed goods are the goods that go to pay us that 8 per cent. Take tobaccos. They start out on the supposition that they will pay you 8 per cent.; in other words, Star or Horseshoe, they bill it to you at 44 cents less 8 per cent. Now, we want to retain that 8 per cent. because it practically costs us that to do business. But along comes a great concern in Chicago, we will say, one of these great mail-order houses. They know these are popular goods; they know that they are well known to every consumer in the country and they quote these goods out at cost. They will do that not only with plug tobaccos but with a great many other lines of goods—soap, etc. They quote the goods out at cost. It hurts the brand, and the grocer has to make it up somewhere else.

I live in Chicago, and I know these men very well who run these great mail-order houses. I have seen their figures. The great house of Sears, Roebuck sold their goods on a basis of about 25 per cent. gross profit, and it costs them about 15 per cent. to do their business, and they had about 10 per cent. net profit. It means this, that when they sell these well-known brands, which they do at cost right along, it means they must make great big profits somewhere else, so that ultimately the consumer is not buying his goods any cheaper.

I had a letter a few days ago sent in to me from a country town in Minnesota. This letter was on goods that our house sold to the retailer at 18 cents. He writes us: "How do you expect us to compete with the great mail-order houses when they go direct and sell to the consumer at 17 cents?" That is what is tearing down our country towns. There are towns that are not as large to-day as they were 10 or 15 years ago. You take Iowa, take Illinois, outside of Chicago, take the rural districts, they are not as great in population as they were ten or fifteen years ago? Why? Because a great business is being centered in great cities and they are being supplied and they are being helped by being able to sell a great many of these so-called listed goods as leaders to fool the people, to get them to come in just as Mr. Erb said to you a little while ago, to sell calico at cost to make a profit on silk.

There is not a retail merchant in the State of Iowa or in your State of Wisconsin or in Michigan but what can meet any mail-order proposition on their own basis of selling for cash right straight through the line, but they—the mail-order houses—have got to use great leaders. In other words, they must fool the people; if they can not fool the people they can not do the business.

American Packers Will Try to Improve the Quality of Their Sardines—and It is High Time They Did.

In an effort to improve the quality of canned sardines that are put up by the Maine packers, plans are being formulated to secure official inspection of the fish before they are placed in the cans. Behind the movement, which has been started by some of the largest canning interests in the State of Maine, is the influence of the Federal Government and the sanction of the National Canners' Association. If the present arrangements are carried out the inspectors will be appointed by the latter organization and will have the power to reject any fish that they consider unsuitable, for any reason These inspectors will try to the quality of fish that are will also make an attempt more sanitary conditions in th canneries, where by far the l of the domestic canned sardin pared for the market. It is by the packers that the schem will entail a much higher cos ing, but the operators feel the added cost of productio more than offset by the elim claims that have been paid i for stocks that have been reje to poor quality and the mone been lost in paying return f these supplies.

Dear Sir:—We are inclosing two of our clippings taken from the two daily papers that we use for advertising.

The space they occupy is alongside the local news column, which we think is the best location in the paper.

Your criticism is requested.

Yours truly,
C. H. SHARPLESS.

Of the advertisements enclosed, one measured two inches double column and the other three inches single column. I reproduce both:

We solicit orders from those who appreciate the quality of what they eat and are not given to letting price overshadow quality.

The best hams sold in Bloomsburg regardless of price.

C. H. SHARPLESS,
Centre St. Wholesale Grocer.

This ham advertisement should surely sell hams if the paper is a good advertising medium. It would have been more appealing, however, to people who first saw it with a casual glance, if a different heading had been used. A snappier heading such as, "You've Never Tasted Such Hams as These." Or "Hams as Sweet as a Nut." The mere mention of a name never makes a good headline unless, perhaps, it is accompanied by a price.

The same criticism can be made of the heading of the other advertisement: "Pastry Flour." The advertisement is good and ought to sell flour, but it would have sold more if the main point had been brought out in the heading. The main point is the price. I should have used something like "A Bargain in Pastry Flour," or "Don't Let This Bargain Pass." The only other criticism I would make of this advertisement is that it doesn't present quite strongly enough- it doesn't present at all—w pastry flour is supposed to course the name tells wha do. but it is never good rely alone on that when

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

Read What Mr. Lautz Says

In this issue, President Lautz of the American Specialty Manufacturers Association, gives this reason why the specialty stamp was adopted for specialty orders:—

> By use of this stamp, the manufacturer notifies and requires of his salesmen that every order taken must be genuine. The retail dealer is being educated to a recognition and acceptance of the fact that such an order obligates him, both legally and morally, to accept delivery pursuant to the terms of the order, while the wholesale grocer is assured of the genuineness of the transaction.

What a boon the specialty stamp has been to everybody! It has swept more fraud and looseness out of the specialty order business than any other factor which has ever appeared. Wise retailers everywhere are refusing to sign any specialty order whatever unless it bears one of the above stamps.

Join the wise ones—for your own good.

eliability—and What it Means in e Fruit and Vegetable Business

¶ If you have never dealt with us you do not realize just what you are missing in the way of service.

¶ In buying Fruits, Vegetables and Nuts the main thing is reliability—you should know that you are going to receive the goods promptly, that they will come in good condition and that the prices are right.

¶ We see to all of that and more—because of our long experience in this business—more than fifty years—we know the market conditions absolutely and buy goods most advantageously, and then pass the advantage along to our customers.

¶ That you can depend on what we do for you is best evidenced by the fact that we have some dealers on our books who have been there for more than thirty years.

¶ Are you receiving our price-list regularly each week? If not, a postal will bring it to your desk.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Look Over Those Old Orders

If you keep copies of your old specialty orders look over those you signed before the best manufacturers began to guarantee them by specialty stamps.

Note how many of them went wrong in some way. The salesman padded it, or the jobber refused or neglected to fill it, or the goods weren't what they were represented to be.

Now glance over those you have signed with the stamp on. You know what your experience has been with them. Can you ask a more striking illustration of what the specialty stamp—and the idea behind it—has done for you?

Before, you never quite knew what was going to come of a specialty order, but you know now.

Franklin Carton Sugar is made from Sugar Cane

Don't forget to tell your customers that FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is made from SUGAR CANE, because there is a decided preference for cane sugar on the part of the consumers and that makes it easier to sell. It is also true that FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is refined by the most modern processes, and then packed in the substantial cartons with the head of Franklin printed in blue on them, and sealed against dust, dampness and insects. It therefore comes to you as the sweetest, cleanest, daintiest sugar you can offer your customers, and the ready-to-sell cartons save your time and prevent loss by overweight.

Original containers hold 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs. FULL WEIGHT of all CARTONS and CONTAINERS guaranteed by us

THE FRANKLIN SUGAR REFINING CO., PHILADELPHIA

If the truth is told, people to-day don't want much but nationally advertised goods. They would never buy an unknown brand if left to themselves.

Which means that when you start to sell unknown brands you must fight the whole public desire. Isn't it best storekeeping to turn this desire to your own profit?

Only Three Items in Sears, Roebuck Catalogue Which Ordinary Grocer Couldn't Meet at a Profit

Sugar, Lenox Soap and Ivory Soap. Contributor Tells What to Do With Them. Thinks the Manufacturer Is Treating the Trade Unfairly.

We have been bucking the mail-order game in one way and another for some time. Among other things we have been issuing a little store paper, and believe that this paper is going to help out considerably along this line as well as being a good investment from an advertising standpoint. We have been studying some of the mail-order catalogues, and have recently looked over Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s grocery catalogue for November and December. As far as we can see there are only two or three items in this catalogue on which a merchant could not meet the price and make a fair profit. One of these is sugar, but, as the price on sugar or the amount sold to any one party is based entirely on the amount of other groceries bought at the same time, it is plain to be seen that this is a leader with a very safe string on it, and any merchant could come out nicely on the same kind of a deal.

The other items are Procter & Gamble's Lenox Soap, regular size, 12 bars 36 cents and 100 bars $2.90. Also Procter & Gamble's Ivory Soap, regular 5-cent size, 12 six-ounce bars 48 cents, 100 six-ounce bars $4. Now, right here is where we make a big holler, and every other retail merchant in the country ought to do the same thing. The last Lenox soap we bought from your house cost us $3.05 per case and freight from Duluth, Ivory soap $4 per case and freight. If we meet this competition we lose money, and we can't see the good of making a leader out of a nationally advertised article that only makes us 20 per cent. gross profit at the best.

It seems to us that the percentage of Lenox and Ivory soap sold by the mail-order houses as compared with the amount sold by the retailers of the country must be small and that the manufacturers should protect the retail merchants in this matter if they expect them to continue handling their product. We believe that if your house would make a protest to Procter & Gamble in regard to this it would at least make them sit up and take notice. We are going to write them a letter in regard to this and will get as many other merchants as we can to do the same thing. For our part, Ivory and Lenox soap go under the counter and won't come out except when we can not persuade a customer that some other soap will answer their purpose just as well.

This same matter came up in regard to Victor traps and now the mail-order houses are quoting these traps at a price at which they can be sold by the retail dealer and show a good profit.

Government Hears Testimony as to Giving More Time to Use Serial Number Labels, and as to Marking Hams and Bacon With the Net Weight.

Canners Make Chief Argument as to Extending More Time to Use Labels Bearing Serial Number Guarantee. Nearly Half a Million Dollars Worth of Labels Still on Hand. Representatives of Grocery Trade Want Hams and Bacon Marked With Net Weight.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
March 17, 1916.

Two food hearings have been held here during the last week, one to decide whether the Government should give more time to use up package labels with the serial number on (the Government has become dissatisfied with this on the ground that it deceives consumers). The other hearing was to decide whether cased hams and bacon are package goods and must bear the net weight on the label. Some time ago the Government ruled that they were not, but it seems likely to change its mind.

The hearing on the request for the extension of the time to use up labels bearing the serial number was chiefly attended by canners. Those representing the canning industry were Albert Bettcher, of Libby, McNeil & Libby; George G. Bailey, of the Fort Stanwix Canning Co., Rome, N. Y.; William H. Sears, of Sears & Nichols Co., Chillicothe, Ohio; A. J. Hubbard, of the John Boyle Co., Baltimore, Md.; Alfred H. Beckmann, secretary of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association; W. F. Bode, of Reid, Murdock & Co., Chicago, and J. C. Puetz, of the Sprague-Warner Co., Chicago.

The National Canners' Association filed an extensive brief which presented the main arguments representing the several hundred canners who have labels on hand bearing the serial number and which amount in value to nearly $450,000. In the brief the National Canners' Association set forth the efforts of the canners and their representatives to conform to previous rulings in the matter of guarantee; also to use up their labels and conform to the new ruling; notwithstanding which, he said, there still appear to be in packers' hands more than $446,299 worth of labels which cannot be used after the first of May. This state of affairs, he said, was due largely to Regulation 9 of the Department, on which the packers had relied in stocking up on labels. They had thought they were specifically doing what the Depa desired in having the gua legend placed on their labels

The association wants hol serial number labels given unl time to use them, provided were printed before May 5, 1

At the hearing on package and bacon, W. F. Bode, cha of the Uniform Tares Commi the National Wholesale G Association; Alfred H. Beck secretary, and Albert S. Rock representing Breed, Abbott & gan, attorneys for the assoc spoke in favor of the reversal ruling which holds that w hams and bacons are not in p form within the meaning statute. The packers were sented by Messrs. Stratton Cabe, Tressler, Lee and members of their legal staffs

President John Bradshaw, Washington Retail Grocers' ciation; Sol. Westerfeld, cha of the Trade Relations Com of the National Retail G Association; Thuer Hanson, missioner of Weights and Me of Massachusetts, and Deputy missioner Tighe, of the New Bureau of Weights and Mea also appeared in favor of t versal of the ruling. Eve present but the packers v hams and bacon to be cons package goods and labeled w net weight. H

Trading Stamp Decision Looks as i Might Cut Both Ways

If the States Act Under it Generally, It Will Leave Ret Helpless Against Such Outside Premium Schemes a Larkin Scheme, Which is Not Subject to a State T

A careful reading of the trading stamp decision handed down last week by the United States Supreme Court in the Florida and Washington cases reveals some interesting things. The two States named passed laws taxing all merchants who used trading stamps and sold package goods containing coupons such a large sum that the tax practically amounted to destroying the business. In both cases, on application, an injunction was granted against the collection of the tax on the ground that it was confiscatory and destructive. Both cases were appealed to the United States Supreme Court which decides in of the tax on both points These points were:— able to meet schemes like the Larkin scheme by giving out trading stamps and coupons, but if his State is going to tax him out of this business, it looks as if he was going to be helpless. I should like your opinion. Yours truly.

O. J. ROBERTS.

We believe off-hand there is considerable in this view of the case. A State, under this Supreme Court decision, passes a law taxing every merchant who gives out trading stamps or sells package goods containing coupons, so exorbitantly that he has to abandon all such premium plans. The law will of course have nothing to do with Larkin and other such people, for they ship their premiums from Buffalo into other States, and are therefore not subject to any tax. It therefore looks as if the decision is not destined to be the unmixed blessing that some of the trade believe.

Failures Show Falling Off Again.

February Record Marks Sharp Decrease From February, 1915, Especially in General Stores, Which Are Scarcely More Than Half.

Failures in all lines continue to decrease, but this is not necessarily a sign of good times, but only a sign that conditions at present are better than conditions a year ago. All authorities agree, however, outside of the percentage of failures, that business in all lines is exceptionally good.

The figures covering the February failures are as follows:—

General Stores—February, 1916, 171; liabilities, $1,445,656; February, 1915, 307; liabilities, $2,864,212.

Groceries—February, 1916, 304; liabilities, $1,249,939; February, 1915, 327; liabilities, $1,226,385.

Clothing—February, 1916, 106; liabilities, $1,143,765; February, 1915, 191; liabilities, $1,774,480.

Dry Goods—February, 1916, 74; liabilities, $924,918; February, 1915, 122; liabilities, $1,740,126.

Shoes—February, 1916, 47; liabilities, $271,209; February, 1915, 52; liabilities, $356,050.

TO THE TRADE—No. 3

PROFITS: Of course you have influence with your trade. Of course you can force some sale of a product which is offered you at an abnormally high profit. But the man who offers you excessive profits thereby confesses that his products lack the strength to sell by merit and demand alone. Most every grocer has tried at some time to make abnormal profits on some line to which the public was indifferent, and has found by experience that he could do more business, do it cheaper and more profitably, by supplying well-established demand lines with legitimate profits and ready sales.

We want you to make a good profit on Clicquot Club Ginger Ale, but we want to protect you at the same time against Clicquot Club becoming a "cut price" line, with consequent loss of the respect of the public. We are protecting you also against the loss of Clicquot Club business by maintaining the highest possible standard of quality production. People don't get tired of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale—they get the Clicquot Club habit fixed.

We are looking forward both for you and ourselves—we are striving to keep Clicquot Club so superlatively good and so universally known that you can keep all your old Clicquot Club customers year after year, and constantly add new ones.

WITH THE EDITOR

It is not clearly understood that the Clayton act prohibiting discrimination in price, and the Federal Trade Commission act, prohibiting unfair competition, do not apply to conditions occurring wholly within a State. If the Standard Oil Co. of New York sells in Pennsylvania in such a way as to violate these laws, then of course they apply, but if the Standard Oil Co. of Pennsylvania sells wholly in Pennsylvania, the act does not apply no matter what is done.

Showing Where a Federal Law Falls Short.

For further illustration, a retailer complained to the Federal Trade Commission recently that a competitor, who was engaged in business in the same city, was selling goods below the price at which he, the complainant, could buy them. The Commission ruled that since the transaction was wholly within one State, it had no jurisdiction.

A jobber complained that a certain retailer was cutting the price of a certain brand of underwear so deeply that he, the jobber, was getting in wrong with his customers. Still another complainant charged that a retailer was selling goods at one price in one locality and at another price in another locality. A third complainant was a manufacturer who said a certain retailer was advertising and selling his, the manufacturer's product, lower than the manufacturer himself sold it at wholesale. The Commission refused to go into any of these cases because they all occurred wholly within a State and were amenable to the State law only.

But they cannot be practiced today. We have the Sherman anti-trust act, and the Clayton act, and the Federal Trade Commission act, and the "seven sisters' acts," and all the other laws which aim to force business men to be fair to their competitors. How far this idea of fairness has gone is seen by Case No. 16 in the official report of the Federal Trade Commission of the rulings it has made. This is Case No. 16:—

> On application for the issuance of a complaint, it was charged by a packer of canned clams that a competitor, in order to drive the complainant out of business, bid up the price of fresh clams to such an extent as to make the business unprofitable. The complainant, when requested, failed to submit further information, and an investigation by the commission did not substantiate the charges made. Held, that the commission, having no reason to believe that the party complained of has been or is using the alleged unfair method of competition, will not proceed further.

You will note that the Commission did not rule that the scheme complained of was illegal. Personally, I don't think it is. I know of no legal reason why a packer of clams should not cut his own throat, if he wants to, but however, we are without a decision on the point because the Commission found that the thing wasn't being done. The reason I cite the case is to show how far the pendulum has swung to the other extreme. Instead of the practical lawlessness of the old days, we now have squeals from business houses when almost anything is done that pinches them a bit.

"What a change has come over the spirit of our dream!" Twenty-five years ago, or thirty-five anyway, business could almost be called lawless. I don't mean that there weren't laws against fraud and dishonesty. There were, just as there are now, but all of the tricks and devices included in the idea that "business is business," were freely practiced even if they ruined a competitor.

A Good Change, But —

The fixed retail price business takes a peculiar slant in the sale of certain kinds of dry goods, particularly underwear. Every general storekeeper knows about this. They have fixed retail prices for the sale of underwear, in somewhat the same way as they have fixed retail prices in the sale of tea or coffee. Every merchant handling underwear has a 50-cent line, and a 75-cent line and perhaps a dollar line. He does not advance his prices with the market, but if the wholesale prices advance, he will usually buy a poorer garment to sell for 50 cents than he bought before. How this works out is interestingly revealed by the following letter, which was written by a manufacturer:—

Where Fixed Retail Prices Don't Work.

> Last season we made what was known as a 50-cent boys' ribbed union suit, that is, that sold at the retail store for 50 cents. Owing to cotton and cotton yarns, and, in fact, everything that went in to make up this garment being cheap last year, we could deliver a very fair garment that retailed for that price.
> But when we started out with our new line last fall we found owing to the increase in everything that went in to make up this garment we could not make that 50-cent garment without cutting the garment to meet the price and we thought it made the garment so poor that we did not want to make such a garment, therefore we discontinued making that garment. If that garment could have been retailed for a little more than 50 cents a garment, we could have continued making the garment and kept it up to the same standard as we had it last year, but of course the jobbers would not pay the extra price and there was nothing left for us to do but discontinue our 50-cent boys' ribbed union suit.

Therefore the manufacturers of this kind of merchandise are in favor of the Stevens bill, because it will enable the manufacturer of a trade-marked brand of underwear to say to the retailer, "for this garment you must get at least 60 cents, or 75 cents," or whatever it may be.

There are two sides to this business of fixing a price, which of course is always a popular price, and then giving the best possible value for it. Sixty cents is a popular price for tea. Thousands of consumers have paid 15 cents a quarter pound for years and they would see no reason for disturbing the practice. Therefore the retailer, instead of fluctuating his price with the market, fluctuates his quality with the market. Why isn't that all right? The consumer is still well served and the relations between him and the dealer are not disturbed.

There is of course another side to this: the consumer may complain that the tea he is getting is not as good as it was. To which the retailer has the obvious answer that the market has advanced, and therefore it cannot be as good. It must not be forgotten that the consumer would also complain if the quality was kept unchanged and the price advanced. Which complain harder to meet is a practic tion that I will not unde answer.

Piggish.

According to a commu from a well-known Ba house, p in another some leg which t the interests of grocers and storekeepers is pending i Jersey with some chance of Naturally this affects not o retailer doing business i Jersey but all the manufa and jobbers who ship in State. The bill is similar t which organized druggist introduced in various State latures, and which by their has become a law in Iowa object is to prevent anybod druggist from selling pate household remedies, and a simple household drugs like and washing soda.

For several reasons t should not pass. The first the druggists are not entitled such protection. They have more deeply from other lin any other retailer in business tionery and magazines fro stationer, candy from the tioner, cigars from the toba gifts from various dealer sometimes coffee and such from the grocer. The a large city drug store is to- most like a department store fore they try to stop groce general storekeepers from the simple drugs they sell, druggists give back what the stolen.

The second reason why t should not pass is that there need of it. In one respect I go further than the bill, for I forbid everybody from sellin ent medicines. But since that parently not going to be done should their sale be confin druggists? Does it require maceutical training to sell a ration the formula of whi largely secret and which con the store sealed? Can a dru sell such merchandise any safely and satisfactorily th al storekeeper? The same can id of the simple household like borax and soda. Must take a college course before sell a pound of borax?

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We call your attention to New Jersey Assembly Bill No. 432, introduced by Mr. Carroll, and New Jersey Senate Bill No. 201, introduced by Mr. Egan.

Assembly Bill No. 432 has been reported favorably by the committee and read twice. These two bills are alike and practically the same as a bill offered at the last session of the New Jersey Legislature.

They put the general store and grocery trade at the mercy of a Board of Pharmacy which is antagonistic to them. As you doubtless know, pharmacists in convention have passed resolutions instructing their attorneys to draft bills which would prevent anybody but registered pharmacists from any participation in any part of the drug business. These resolutions have been followed by bills offered in the Legislatures of the different States. These bills have always been beaten wherever opposed; in a few States they were slipped through before the general merchant knew it.

There is but one object in all of these pharmacy bills and that is to prevent the general storekeeper from participation in the drug business, or under such drastic regulations as would make it impossible for him to engage in it.

The bills referred to provide that this Board of Pharmacy, which is composed exclusively of pharmacists actively engaged in the practice of their profession, "shall examine into each application for a license to sell drugs and medicines as a licensed storekeeper in drugs; and if in the judgment of the Board applicant is qualified as a proper person * * * and the issuing of such a license supplies a public need and is not a detriment to public health or morals, they shall grant such applicant a license as a licensed storekeeper in drugs. * * * Each license so issued shall set forth the name and character of the articles to be sold under such license."

Why should the general merchant be licensed to sell the ordinary household remedies and patent and proprietary medicines when sold in original packages? What skill or especial intelligence is necessary, or what has the requirement of "morals" to do with the proposition? And why should a hostile Board of Pharmacy, which has no general merchant nor layman upon it, pass upon the question as to whether the sale of drugs at a particular point is "a public need" or not? Why should the question of "public need" enter into it any more than that the Board should decide how many drug stores should be in a neighborhood? And, why should this hostile Board, representing a class whose financial interest it is to see that general merchants shall not handle any drugs be permitted to specify what drugs the merchant should sell?

This kind of a bill slipped through in Iowa, and at this very time the merchants throughout that State are protesting vigorously against it and endeavoring to have it set aside. They are allowed to sell only seven or eight item of which can rightfully be as drugs.

Further on these New bills provide: "If applicant is factory to the Board, etc. license shall be issued." makes the applicant entirely d ent upon the whim of the with or without other reason why a license should or shou be granted him.

The bills go on further t that the licensed storekeeper not sell any drugs or me preparations unless they bea label of a registered pharma a reputable pharmaceutical facturer."

Why the name of a regi pharmacist? Why not the na any manufacturer or pack drugs whether in or out State?

In a certain State where vision such as this was in th the authorities have ruled th name of the pharmacist upo package must be the nam some pharmacist registered i State.

There are many other u unnecessary and drastic prov in the bill.

It could not be amended factorily, and ought to be Immediate action upon your is necessary. Wire or write Senator and Legislator to both of these bills.

Here is a Proposed New Plan of Selling Goods.

It is Intended to Dispense With the Present System of Open Accounts. Buyer is Supposed to Sign an Admission That He Owes for the Goods, and the Seller Takes This and Discounts It at His Bank Like a Note.

Mr. Russell S. Hubbard, an expert banker and credit man, thinks that the present credit system between the wholesaler and retailer, covering the purchase and sale of merchandise, should be changed, and a system which he outlines, and which is in use abroad to some extent, should be substituted.

In the course of an address in Philadelphia during the week, Mr. Hubbard described his new system thus:—

> Suppose you are a grocer and buy several hundred crates of eggs from the man who has raised the hens and knows their history. Instead of sending you the goods and the bill and entering the transaction on the ledger as an open account, the egg producer asks you to send him the bill of lading with something after this import stamped across its face: "Yes, I did get those goods and owe you for them." This latter document is called a trade acceptance, or a domestic bill of exchange.
> In a few States the egg man can take this acceptance to his own bank and receive credit for its face value, minus a certain discout. But many banks in this country do not take kindly to this system, claiming that it puts upon their shoulders a certain burden and risk which they are loathe to assume. These banks say: "Well, that man may be good pay and he may not. I can only allow you 50 to 60 per cent. of the value of this until I make an investigation."
> I want everybody selling goods to use this "trade acceptance" system. Moreover, I want the Federal Reserve Banks to say (as they can by law, but haven't yet): "Bring on those trade acceptances. We'll discount them at nearly the full value."
> The principal difficulty in the matter is not to get the Reserve Bank to accept these bills, but to provide a universal form of trade acceptance, which would be adhered to by all people doing business.

In other words, the plan in a nutshell is, when A sells goods to B, to have B sign some kind of a statement that he has received the goods, admits owing for them and will pay in due course. If B is financially good, which he must be or A would not have trusted him, A can treat the paper B has signed as a sort of note and get it discounted at the bank. It is really not very different, in its essence, from the scheme some trust companies and other concerns are working, of buying accounts receivable from jobbers at their face value less a discount.

We want the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World"—it's well worth the price, brings many a gleam of sunshine into our burdened lives. We consider it the best of its kind.—M. V. N. Braman, North Adams, Mass.

Will it be worth while to hear the story of our personal relation to the Cover- Smoked Meats? We have been Leaders along this line and our present position development of a long experience in which we have followed our highest ideals. enior is on the last quarter lap of his fifty-fourth year of business under his own The first twenty-five years were spent in running an ordinary Pork Packing ess, with decent standards for that day; then new light broke in upon us. Me- al Refrigeration had become a practical success for the Slaughter Houses and Vaults, the Refrigerator Cars, the Steamship Chill Rooms, Hotel Larders, etc. rew overboard the General Packing Business and deliberately took up instead ciaities the Curing and Smoking of the Ferris High-grade Hams and Boneless fast Bacon under the motto:—

"Our Constant Aim is to make Them the Finest in the World!"

We believed in the ultimate Preference of enough wise Consumers for excellent iform quality in a valuable Food Product to justify our depending entirely on lect class for our Success in Business. We ventured all on that throw.

ESSENTIALS IN A COVER FOR SMOKED MEATS

Following out our ambition, the necessity for an efficient, economical Covering ery piece of Smoked Meat was at once impressed upon us. We set ourselves devising a Cover. These were the essentials of the problem:—

1. It must be as light as possible in texture.

2. It must be of some material that will not easily soften or rot when permeated by the escaping moisture of the juices of the Meat d. A cotton fabric will not do in the long run. We had to provide a cover that would substantially carry our Meats to the ends of th, as a large part of our Weekly Product is packed for Export Orders.

3. This must not be air tight, or moisture tight, hence all devices for covering a Ham with a daub of glue, etc., and even the parch- apers that are so much in vogue, are not now suitable for this purpose. In the ordinary processes of Nature's protective work, a Fresh d Ham for long is giving off a little moisture from the juices of the Meat and slight emanations of gas. These both must be passed rom the Meat and permitted to evaporate in the outer air, where they will do no further damage. If shut in on the Meat itself, as you e, they tend to aid fermentation, creating ill flavor, and, ultimately, decomposition. Do you see the necessities of the case we had to We found a practically perfect cover in the Scotch Burlap we have used for a quarter of a century. It is a curious thing that there a Jute Weaving Mill in this Country that is able to make this quality of Burlap. You notice how cleanly the thread is woven (i. e., e) and how close the mesh is. This permits the evaporation of the gases and the moisture to which we have referred, but will not he inroads of vermin or defilement by any outside filth. We have to order this woven for us in Scotland.

We also use one sheet of our standard paper, made from Jute Butts. There is not an ounce of wood pulp in it. Curiously eno we sent a Sample Ham to Brazil years ago to have returned to us, using a wood pulp paper. When it came back, after four months, was unwrapped, we found the surface of the Ham covered with a substance resembling black pepper; on bringing the microscope to bear saw there were untold thousands of wood lice. However, their germs could have escaped all the heat and acid treatment of the wood in its formation into paper, we never could understand, but we have had occasion repeatedly to prove this effect from the use of wood paper.

Our Cover we have marked by several Trade Mark Patents. The Series of Blue Stripes woven in, the Blue Tape, bearing our M lic Seal, our Shield Shaped Label, and the name "Ferris" all are protected in this way. This shows you how much we value our protec wrap and how fully we stand by it and claim its benefits for our Consumers. And who pays for it?

The Consumer pays for it as for everything he buys. It's for his benefit. Here he gets his money's worth.

He is not paying something for nothing. He is paying for Decency! Cleanliness! Safety! Health! Worth your while? an effective wrap can secure these for you!

THE SANITARY NECESSITY OF A COVERING TO THE CONSUMER.

To anyone who investigates the handling of a Naked Smoked Ham or Bacon Flitch from the time it goes out from any Smoke H until it reaches your kitchen, many unpleasant surprises may be revealed. The way of any self-respecting Ham is beset by as many fi in the way of dirt and microbes as ever Dante imagined, and it would be enough to condemn all Smoked Meats on any respectable tab each Housekeeper and her brood knew through what the average piece of Naked Smoked Meat had come. Of this you know enoug appreciate the force of what we say.

Did you ever take note of a Butcher's wagon making its delivery round? A dirty Street—clouds of dust, driving in all the uncov baskets, thousands of particles sticking on the receptive Hams or Bacon Flitches in many a basket. And what makes up that dust clo Street filth, dried spittle, disintegrated manure, germs galore. Appetizing? If it goes into your kitchen, and unwashed, on your plate?

The writer sat in his Dentist's Chair in January. He had just recovered from a Grippe attack and was talking with the Operato to the germs which spread the disease. The Dentist said: "I came in on the train a day or two ago, sitting on the West side. The morn sun shone in on the opposite window. In that seat was a burly man, incessantly sneezing and coughing. I happened to look over, after a lent fit and saw in the bright sunlight a halo of vaporized excretions, extending three feet around his head. That gave me a new and v idea of how Grippe germs were spread. Now, suppose the Driver or Delivery Boy is a Grippe Patient, vaporizing in his sneezing and cou ing uncounted germs over the contents of the basket he brings to your house. Is that appetizing again? You would stand for cov Meats ever after you caught sight of such a scene, would you not? Three or four Winters ago many of the horses in our section w afflicted with Epizootic. Their coughing, sneezing, nose discharges, etc., necessarily pervaded the air about them and smeared the har which the driver handled. Imagine the germ clouds floating back to the wagon and the driver carrying his basket into your kitchen, with infected hands taking out a Naked Bacon Flitch or Ham? Appetizing again? As we have been through all this in personal experience, you wonder we feel it absolutely necessary on sanitary grounds alone, that the Government should insist upon Smoked Meats being secu covered from the Smoke House to the Kitchen? It is disappointing to those who would promote best sanitary conditions that the real t of this Net Weight Movement on the official side has been to prejudice the Consumers against Wrapped Meats as a swindle on them, t decreasing their proportionate sale while it increases the sale of Naked Meats. Is that working for the Sanitary Interests of Consumers?

AN HONEST SERVICE FOR EVERY CONSUMER.

Five or six years ago, when the brilliant but erratic Hon. Clement Driscoll was appointed Commissioner of Weights and Measures Greater New York, he sprung the idea of selling Smoked Meats exclusively by Net Weight. He had a moral impulse back of it, beca he said that some unscrupulous Packers loaded down their Covered Meats with two or three sheets of paper and an unnecessarily heavy co He reported that he found cases where a Ham carried 2 pounds of covering material and he thought this was, on its face, a swindle to Consumer, as indeed it was. Therefore, he jumped to the conclusion that all Covers were swindles and the only way was by law to com the sale of Smoked Meats only at Naked Weight. There were some difficulties in this. The Naked Weight was constantly changing a every Ham was giving off something of its moisture as it hung, week after week, and then the Net Weight could only actually be determi at time of sale to the Consumer by ripping off the cover. Neither the Retail Grocer nor the Consumer, had the facilities to replace the co so that however well the Ham may have been protected up to that time, the New Net Weight Regulations would divest it of protection from Stores to the Home.

We invited Commissioner Driscoll to visit us, showed him our Plant and Processes and went through the whole question of Cove Meat, step by step; he was receptive and appreciative of the situation when we got through, frankly declaring our system was adequate a necessary, but he said hopelessly:—

"What can I do? I cannot say Ferris Hams are all right and may be sold at Covered Weights, for that would be giving individ preference in an offensive way."

"Surely not," said we, "but Mr. Commissioner, suppose you are satisfied that our Cover is necessary on sanitary grounds and that is reasonable. Then take our average weight of Cover, and without referring to 'Ferris' at all, or giving 'Ferris' any advantage, establish certain percentage of weight which covers must not exceed."

"But how about those fellows that are loading 2 pounds on every Ham?"

"Why that is a clear case of fraud. If you have your standard and find such a gross swindle as this, proceed in each case for fraud, b do not embarrass those who are protecting the public and providing the best sanitary conditions for every eater."

This struck the Commissioner as equitable and sensible, but not feasible for him. He seemed to feel that the cry of "N Weights only for the Consumer" had a ringing sound of justice, which spelled popularity. We have always been a law-abiding fir and we have been honored with the favor and confidence of our various Commissioners, City and State in turn, when they learned our metho and our reasons for following them.

A NEW INVOICE FORM FOR GREATER NEW YORK.

So we proposed to Commissioner Driscoll that if it were necessary, as we had always sold Covered Meat at gross weights, making the rices accordingly, that we should educate our Grocer Patrons to the new order of things by having a dual Invoice. In the first division we hould enter as we had for forty years, count, gross weight and price, extending the amount.

In the second, we should enter in the gross, the tare of the cover, the net weight of Meat when it left us at the correspondingly increased rice, which would extend to match the sum above.

ll Payments must be made directly to the House, either upon our Draft, or by Check to our Order. Our Salesmen do not Collect.

The above is a copy of the dual Invoice of the first order entered under this form five years ago, a delivery to one of the Park & ilford Stores.

Commissioner Driscoll at once gave his approval and we have been favored with the commendation of many Health and Weight uthorities ever since, and yet, as practical men, we put it to you, what nonsense all this has been for the Customer, for the Grocer, and for irselves.

What odds does it make to the State, to the Consumer, to the Dealer or ourselves, whether we sell Hams at Net Weight at a larger rice, or a Covered Ham at Wrapped Weight at a lower price, since the Ham costs the Grocer and in turn the Consumer exactly the same mount to one cent. What practical folly it is! We repeat, what odds does it make whether the Grocer sells a Ferris Wrapped Ham, weighing 2 pounds 8 ounces, at 24 cents, amounting to $3, or 12 pounds and 2 ounces at 24 73/100 cents, amounting to $3.

But we have kept faith with our City Authorities ever since on all Invoices within the limits of Greater New York.

Is there anything better than our first suggestion that the Net Weight Authorities should establish a percentage of fair, cover tare, nd in case of manifest injustice on the part of any Packer, proceed against him for fraud?

JUSTICE FOR HONEST CURERS.

An element of injustice to us is this: that during all these years, while we have been keeping faith with the Department, the large Western Houses have refused to observe the Ordinance, and, although Actions have been begun by our Department of Weights and Measres, these Cases, as you know, can be kept in the Courts indefinitely. In the meantime, the bars are hedged around the Ferris Meats in reater New York, while confessedly they do not need it, and our whole territory is swamped with a flood of Western Meats put out by Packrs who defy such Regulations. You would not stand for that, would you? We have said to the Department repeatedly, "When you can serve l alike and make all alike obey, that will be fair." In the meantime, do not put an erroneous and unnecessary restriction on Ferris Meats hen you are perfectly satisfied that they do not need rebuke or correction, but commendation, as working for the Consumers' health and afety.

A CONFUSION OF TWO SEPARATE FACTS—"Net Weight" and "Natural Evaporation."

Every Ham or Bacon Flitch hung for any length of time before being used, decreases slightly day by day in weight; the water from he Juices of the Meat evaporates. This is a natural process and is in no respect a swindle on the Consumer. The Writer appeared before ur former erratic Chief Executive, Mayor Gaynor, two or three years ago at a hearing on this subject.

Mayor Gaynor spoke of buying a Virginia Ham which had been hanging several months in the Grocery Store and had decreased 2 ounds in its marked weight, so that instead of weighing 20 pounds when he was ready to use it for his favored guests, it only weighed 18 pounds, and with his usual force he dilated on "this 2 pound swindle." I said to him, "Mr. Mayor, you are fond of Smithfield Virginia Suppose in order to have one whenever you wish it to serve at a Dinner to your friends, you buy a half dozen in October and hang th your cellar. You get every ounce you pay for at that time and it does not make any difference to you whether you pay so much per for Wrapped Weights or proportionately more per pound for Net Weight, for you pay the same amount for the lot in either case.

"When these have hung through the Winter the last one has been in your larder for six months and you make the discovery weighs, when you are ready to have it cooked, 2 pounds less than you paid for six months before. Is this a swindle? And against will you proceed? Against the Curer? But he gave you all he charged for when you bought it, and you were satisfied with the price a product. Against His Honor, Mayor Gaynor, in whose home the 'fraudulent shrinkage occurred?' Is the Mayor a Swindler becaus natural process of evaporation has been going on in his larder for six months? When his Cook boils a Smithfield Ham, if he weighs i the process, and he finds it has taken back 2 pounds or more of the water into the Meat, has anybody been swindled?" Or was ther swindle at any point to anybody?

His Honor, the Mayor, did not seem to rise to the occasion with this practical illustration, but is it a hard nut to crack, Gentlen the Commission?

Would the interests of the Consumer be better served if day by day the Grocer reduced the weight of hanging Hams by a fract an ounce, increasing the price correspondingly? So long as the original weight was honestly marked and the price fixed thereon, w gained by lowering the weight a small fraction day by day and increasing the price in the same measure.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

As our Meats, going into other States, constitute Interstate Commerce, we do not carry the dual Invoice System, beyond the bo of our own State, but every Burlapped Ham and Bacon Flitch has on it the stencilled tare of the cover, so that the Grocer or Marke may easily conform to any Ordinances that obtain in his own Parish.

We beg to enclose sample of the Ferris Burlap, Jute Butt Paper, hanging Tape, with Cards illustrating our Covered Product, for delivery. We also enclose a little Booklet "Not Advertising but Information." We have circulated Suggestions, Recipes, Explana etc., by the million pages. An informed Housekeeper is a Satisfied Housekeeper, but the work of illy-informed Reformers (A Reformer lots of good horse-sense and honesty), Orators, Club Leaders, etc., with the best intention in the World, have greatly misled the Consum our Country, bringing to pass a condition the very opposite of that which was intended. The leading Distributor of Meats, Vegetables, Ca Goods, etc., in one of our residential towns in New Jersey, near New York, told us shortly ago that the women of M. would not pa price for good Food Products. Why? They had been misled to think adequately covered Meats were all a swindle against them, that G Grocers' Profits were enormous and undeserved, and they must be all the time on the look-out for lower prices. This made them all an prey to the Producers of cheap Foods. We are sure your Honored Bureau will take a wide view of this question and that your influ on Legislation in the future will be to secure an even right of way for Best Goods, prepared under the most Sanitary Conditions, and S ing Nutrition to each of us in its most helpful form.

As hether it will, in any way, af- the legal status of the pre- situation in those States e prohibitory legislation has declared unconstitutional is a ion. In other words, quite a er of the States, including York have passed upon this ion in their Supreme Courts have held that the giving of iums was a legitimate exercise he right of an individual to uct his business in a lawful ner. It is virtually a certainty in such States the Supreme t decision can, of course, make hange in the existing legal sit- n. This is so because the deci- sions of the various State courts have proceeded upon an interpretation of the State laws and statutes, and on these matters the decisions of the State courts are final.

As to the effect of the present decision upon the status of premium giving, even in such States as Washington, some of the anti-premium advocates will probably be disappointed. As a matter of fact, under the statute now held to be constitutional in the State of Washington, premium tokens can continue to be given, providing a cash valuation is placed upon them, and the goods are technically purchased for the money value of the coupons or tokens instead of exchanged outright for them. Therefore, the only practical effect of these decisons is that virtually all the premium houses will do as the larger concerns have been doing for some time past—make their tokens redeemable in cash in the first instance—when doing business in a State such as Washington. The effect of the decisions on the companies, therefore, will simply be a matter of adjusting their business to it, as, in fact, many have already done.

A phase of the premium situation which has been lost sight of by the opponents of the system is the benefit which will undoubtedly accrue to certain premium giving concerns as a result of State legislation on the subject. There appears to be no question as to the legality of sending premiums by mail, express or freight. This being purely an interstate proposition, the States cannot interfere in any way. Therefore such companies as are now doing business by mail exclusively, giving premiums with their merchandise, will probably be materially benefitted by an extension of State legislation against the giving of premiums within the State and the selling by retailers of goods carrying premium tokens. As is well known to the grocers particularly, there are large mail order companies doing an enormous business in all kinds of grocery products who use premiums as their main business getters. If it should come about that soap companies, condensed milk companies, etc., should give up the distribution of premiums, very possibly the mail order houses using premiums would find their business greatly increased, to the detriment of the manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers.

Under the circumstances it is quite possible to foresee the time when the retailers will be exerting their efforts in favor of the premium system as conducted by the manufacturers, whose goods they handle, instead of opposing all kinds of premium propositions. In fact, instances could be shown now where retail grocers' associations have given their support to certain premium carrying articles, which they sold, in order to overcome the inroads which mail order houses giving premiums were making upon their business.

The whole question is a much broader one than some people im-

Eastern markets unchanged and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are considerably unsettled by reason of the embargo placed by England upon imports. On the coast the market is perhaps a half cent lower than it was a short time ago. There are considerable stocks of prunes in the East, having been intended for export, which will now have to be thrown on the market or stored. If they are thrown on the market, prices will undoubtedly decline. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and quiet. Raisins show no change for the week. Thompson seedless are growing very scarce. The consumptive demand for raisins is fair. Currants have shown a sharp advance for the week, due to a jump in Greece. The quotation in New York in a large way in barrels has risen to 11 cents per pound, which is very high. Other dried fruits unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about unchanged on last week's basis and so are marrows. The demand is fair with markets not overly strong. California limas show an advance of about 10 cents per bushel for the week; demand fair. Green and Scotch peas unchanged.

Butter.

We are having a very active demand for all grades of butter at an advance of from 1 to 2 cents per pound over last week on all grades. Storage butter is about cleaned up and the trade is being supplied mostly with fresh butter. No relief from the present conditions is expected for two or three weeks.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs are increasing as the season advances and with the very good consumptive demand the market is firm at prices prevailing about the same as a week ago. The quality arriving is average fancy and all eggs meet with ready sale on arrival. The market is firm on the present basis of quotations and there is not likely to be much change in the immediate future.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at prices ranging about a quarter cent per pound above a week ago with an increased consumptive demand. The stocks of cheese are lighter than usual owing to considerable cheese being sent abroad. The market is in a healthy condition on the present basis of quotation, and if there is any change it is likely to be a slight advance.

Fish.

Mackerel continues scarce and high with occasional fluctuations, depending upon the disposition of the holders to sell. The demand is light on account of the very high prices. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. Domestic sardines are unchanged for the week, price being maintained at the recently reported advance. All imported sardines are scarce and very high.

Provisions.

The consumptive demand for smoked meats is normal for the season. The prices are about a half cent per pound higher than last week. Pure lard and compound are steady with a fair consumptive demand at the recent advance. No change of any consequence in price is expected. Barreled pork is steady at unchanged prices with a light demand. Canned meats and dried beef are unchanged with a seasonable demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market continues active, the demand being large for many articles in the list. The consumption seems to be greater than ever before and there is also a large export demand to South and Central America.

Pepper.—The situation is generally unchanged. Foreign markets are higher and cables quote higher prices than those prevailing here. Our prices have practically been unchanged during the week, still the market is very firm and the tendency is upward.

Cloves.—Very steady and in good demand. There is a firm tone in all positions.

Pimento (Allspice).—While firm in price, is unchanged during the week.

Mace.—Continues as scarce as ever, and with wider demand.

Nutmegs.—In very limited spot supply. The market is firmer and the tendency is certainly upward.

Gingers.—Fairly steady and in good trade demand. Prices unchanged.

Cassias.—Generally unchanged. Prices firm in all grades. Very high prices are now being quoted for shipment from the Orient.

Tapiocas.—Very much firmer and higher. All grades of tapioca are expected to advance to a high figure.

Paprikas.—Good grades of Spanish are now reported scarce. Prices on other grades are firm.

McCormick & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The herring market remains unchanged in all particulars. Norway reports a $21 price there for milk and roe herrings, which, of course, is unobtainable here. Just a few small lots of Norway mackerel arrived here, but nothing to speak of. The market here is very much firmer, and at least a dollar per barrel higher from prices quoted last week, and all sizes are very scarce. There is a good demand and present stocks should be cleared very soon.

The imported sardine situation is going from bad to worse. There seems to be no catch in Norway, no catch in France and no catch in Portugal; in fact, it is almost impossible to get supplies even at the high prices which are being asked, subject to pack, at least not at present. There is a real good demand for all kinds of imported sardines, and it is much easier to sell the goods if one has them than to get them.

Strohmeyer & Arpe Co.
New York.

Rice.

The market for the week has been rather quiet, but at the close there is more inquiry, with large sales reported for export from this as well as New Orleans markets. Receipts continue in moderate volume. Values are firmly held, and as new supplies come to hand, they are priced more in accordance with temper and tone of primary markets. On the general line, however, the New York market is, at the moment, a shade under the range of producing sections. We are just in receipt of confirmed advices that an embargo has been declared in Galveston and New Orleans, which undoubtedly will have a stiffening tendency on spot stocks.

At New Orleans the clean rice market is almost panicky. Large shipments going to Porto Rican, Cuban and South American markets, which has had the effect of establishing a very strong, active market and it looks to well-posted

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the mills report active conditions and their ability to move all offering at full prices. The rough rice market continues strong and it is reported that there is very little rough rice left in farmers' hands. During the next few weeks most of the mills will have to shut down, with very little prospect of being able to start up in the near future.

agine, and when it is brought home to the retailers that they are not just fighting trading stamp propositions which may help some retailers as against others, but are trying to take away from the manufacturers, whose goods they sell, their particular method of fighting mail order competition on premiums, the retailers will hesitate to lend their aid further to the movement.

The recently organized National Trade Association has sent abroad throughout the United States arguments against the pending Stevens bill, which would give to manufacturers of trade-marked products the right to set the retail price. The argument which the association makes is that the Government should not give to manufacturers the arbitrary right to fix the retail price of their products unless it also investigates the fairness of the prices which the manufacturers should fix. The circular states that the bill prohibits sellers from making any allowance of discount, rebate or commission, but this is a mistake, for the recent amendment to the Stevens bill permits discounts for large quantities. The summary of the National Association's argument is as follows:—

Summary and Conclusion.—At the present time the patent and the trade-mark are the only legalized monopolies, and are limited in time to seventeen years, whereas, under the Stephens Bill, it would give unlimited monopoly, particularly as to duration.

It is an established fact that branded merchandise can be duplicated without a brand at less cost. The bill, through its protection of manufacturers, would increase the manufacture of branded goods, and thus would the consumers have to pay a great deal more for their merchandise.

The provisions against agreements, combinations and understandings between manufacturers will be just as ineffective as are the attempts to prevent the railroads getting together on tariffs, and will lead to endless litigation, injurious to all business.

The bill is entitled, "To Protect the Public Against Dishonest Advertising and False Pretenses in Merchandising," but it might more properly be entitled, "A Bill to Legalize Arbitrary Price Making, Restrict Open Competition, Establish Monopoly and Provide Government Protection of the Same."

The trade here are much interested in the fact that New York City is beginning to buy her own coffee green and roasting it herself for the various city departments. Already contracts for about 300,000 pounds of Santos have been entered into. Specifications for quality have been entered into by H. M. Foster, Examining Inspector in collaboration with William B. Harris, coffee expert for the United States Government, and Mr. Cottrell, of Reamer, Turner & Co., which will revolutionize the standards for measuring the quality of coffee. I have obtained a full copy of the specifications which some of the trade think may revolutionize the trade methods of buying coffee, and here present it, this particular specification being for Bogota:—

"SPECIFICATION FOR COFFEE, GREEN (BOGOTA).

General.—Bogota coffee shall be coffee grown in the States of Antioquia, Tolima, Gundinamarca or Boyaca of the United States of Columbia. It shall be of good to large bean, good roast, soft, good, body, sweet drinking, of the grade the number of which is as called for in the schedules, and equal to the standard sample exhibited by the contract department. From every delivery a sample shall be taken by trier from not less than 10 per cent. of the number of bags delivered, and from such sample combined a sufficient sample shall be taken, and it shall be roasted, ground, brewed and tested in the cup for flavor.

Definition of Grade.—Bogota coffee of the grades enumerated below shall show not more than the number of defects per pound sample as indicated in the following table:—

Grade.	Defects.
No. 1	0
No. 2	6
No. 3	12
No. 4	30
No. 5	60
No. 6	120

Standard Defects.—The standard units of defects shall be one black bean or its equivalent and the equivalents shall be as follows:—

Definition of Defects Equal to One Black Bean.

1 bean ½ black.
2 beans less than ½ black.
4 quakers.
4 immatured beans.
4 badly cured, soft or sour beans.
2 scorched beans.
3 shells.
6 broken beans, sound.
1 large stone equal 3 black beans.
1 large twig equals 2 black beans.
1 large husk.
1 medium sized stone.
1 medium sized twig.
2 small stones.
3 small twigs.
2 small husks.
1 pod.

As applied to stones, twigs and husks, the words "large," "medium" and "small" shall be interpreted to mean larger than, equal to or smaller than an averaged size coffee bean of the kind of coffee specified.

Certificate of Grade.—With each delivery the contractor shall furnish a certificate of grade from a licensed grader of the New York Coffee Exchange, selected by the commissioner of the contracting department.

Importer's Certificate.—With each delivery the contractor shall furnish a certificate certifying the name of the vessel in which the coffee delivered was imported to the port of New York and the date of arrival of such vessel at said port.

Sampling.—Each delivery shall be sampled by a licensed sampler of the trade, selected by the contracting department.

Delivery.—It shall be delivered in the original unbroken packages in closely woven burlap bags containing 135 to 165 pounds net.

Empty bags shall be returned to the contractor, when so stated in the schedules. No grass bags shall be accepted.

Payment.—Payments shall be made for the number of pounds net accepted, at the price bid per pound for each grade.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea somewhat more active as buyers are coming into the market to replenish stocks. India Ceylons very firm.—Coffee quiet without change for the week, but values in Rio and Santos are unchanged. Milds quiet at ruling prices.—Sugar very firm and high, holders asking 6.02 for raws and refiners quoting 6.90 to 7 cents for granulated. Refiners are at present very reluctant sellers of refined sugar. The cause of the advance is continued heavy export demand.—Cheap salmon developed some strength during the week and holders have practically now advanced their prices to the basis quoted some time ago, being 80 cents in a large way f. o. b. for pinks. This is Worth Reading.

Say, it's some job knowing what to do in the way of work, ain't it?

Some fellows I know seem to be plumb sure that they've got into the line that they can do the best, and I guess they have, too, judging by the way they eat it up, but a big bunch of us ain't sure. Even though we're making a living, we ain't sure that we couldn't have made a better one if we'd gone into something else.

Ain't that right? And been more comfortable, too, for a fellow has a heap better time when he's in something that he likes than he is when he's in something that he don't like, or only puts up with because he has to.

Me, I know I ain't in the line I could do the best. What I can do the very best of anything is to be a loafer. That's what I was put on earth to do—to live on my money. And there's only one thing that keeps me from doing it, too. You have one guess what that is.

I know a fellow—he's making a pretty good living being an accountant. You know what that is—it's a sort of high-grade bookkeeper; they get up office systems and all that sort of stuff.

The other day I was talking to him about things in general. He was going on to me about a store that he got into once in a while—telling me how bad the thing was run and the stunts that the owner of it could have put over to make his business better.

Why the ideas that that boy let out were great! What did that mean? It meant that he ought to be in the retail business, that's what it meant! You could tell by the way he talked that that was his line, and he would have been fair wrapped up in that kind of work. Ain't it a shame?

I told him so, too.

"Why old man," I said, "I believe you'd have made good in the retail business. I believe that's where you ought to be!"

"Too late now," he said, "I'd like the work all right and believe I'd have made a success at it, but I'm too old now."

He got into the accounting business because his father was one, and he went in with him. Lots of fellows do that. They go into the line that's ready-made for 'em, because it's the easiest thing to do. And a big bunch of 'em are sorry for it after they wake up, if they do wake up.

I'm thinking right now of another friend of mine who ain't ever made very good at anything he's been in. He's been in blame near everything, and done his best, but he ain't ever been more than a second-grade man.

And the worst of it is that he's an A No. 1 man—for something, if he could only find out what it is.

Maybe he will yet, he's only 45.

First he was a clerk in a retail store. He made an all right clerk—in the $14 class. He did his work all right and was honest and square and all that, but he was only a second-grade man. Fourteen dollars was about his size.

Then he went on the road for a Baltimore wholesale house, and he made out all right there, but only in a small way. I think he got a thousand a year there, and that was all he was worth. He did his best, understand—went on his trips regular and covered 'em and sold some goods, but he never got anywhere. If he'd kept on in that line for fifty years he wouldn't have been making any more at the end of it than he did at the beginning.

Know what I mean?

Then his wife got a little money left to her and she got him off the road and they opened a store. That's the only thing he actually fell down in. He worked like a slave and his wife with him, but they didn't make it go. It didn't fail—they sold out to another man, but they dropped some money.

This last bump was only last fall and he's in the insurance business now and he's making a skinny living out of it, too, but it ain't his line any more than the others were.

What is his line? You can search me, but I know there is one. Here's a photograph of him: He's a fair-looking chap, clean and all right, with a face as honest as the sun and he's a bully talker. He reads a lot and he knows a lot—he can you on any subject. Som there's something that boy with a rush and make a lot fort and money out of.

I don't know whether yo it or not, but there's a bu people in the same boat. I how many fellows ever sat d themselves, when the time c them to pick their work, an themselves up to see what fit into best. Did you? I o didn't. Most people sort into something—the easies for 'em to go into right then the time—oh, more than ain't the thing they can mak in the best.

How we going to stop it? now that I've gave my op expect it'll stop itself.

No. 355.—The Federal Trade Commission Has Taken the Stand That Exclusive Selling Agreements Are Legal in the Average Case.

When the Clayton anti-monopoly act was passed, I was asked to express an opinion, and did so through one of these articles, as to whether Section 3 would prevent a jobber from selecting one customer in a town or territory, and refusing to sell anybody else, or selling that one only on some such condition that the customer should not sell competitive goods. Such deals are being made in almost every line today. My judgment was that they were not made illegal by the Clayton act, unless their effect might be to "substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly."

Which would practically never be the case with an ordinary jobber or manufacturer who did not control the market.

Section 3 of the Clayton act is as follows:—

> Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any territory thereof or the District of Columbia, or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, ware, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

There was also in the Federal Trade Commission act, passed about the same time, a prohibition against "unfair competition," which some people thought might also be violated by exclusive sales agreements. My judgment was that unless such agreements tended to cause monopoly they would not be considered unfair competition.

The Federal Trade Commission has just sent me copies of several of its rulings upon this precise question, from which I am interested to see that the Commission entirely agrees with me as to exclusive agreements. It appears that several business firms who considered themselves injured because somebody had an exclusive contract with their competitors and refused to sell them, wrote in to the Commission and asked that prosecution be begun. To all of these, up to now, the Commission has replied that exclusive contracts are not unlawful unless they tend to cause monopoly.

From the rulings sent me I have prepared the following brief summaries of a few:—

CASE No. 6.

A manufacturer engaged in interstate commerce, having designated an exclusive dealer in a certain local territory, refused to sell to another dealer within this territory. It further appeared that such exclusive dealer was under no obligation to refrain from dealing in the products of other manufacturers of the same commodity. Held, that neither the Federal Trade Commission Act nor the Clayton Act prohibits manufacturers selling their product exclusively through one dealer in a given territory. A refusal to sell to others in such territory under such circumstances, is, therefore, not unlawful.

CASE No. 9.

A manufacturer of pianos tied up his customers, which were really agents, with a contract to resell only in certain territory; also not to handle any other piano. It was held that this did not violate the law, because the customer was merely the manufacturer's agent.

CASE No. 13.

A manufacturer compelled his customers to sign an agreement providing that if he would agree to give them exclusive sale of his goods in their territory, they would not sell outside of their own territory. It was held that "Section 3 of the Clayton Act does not prohibit manufacturers selling their product exclusively through one dealer in a given territory and requiring the dealer not to sell their product outside of the territory assigned."

CASE No. 14.

A mail order dealer complained because a number of manufacturers refused to sell him, their reason being that they sold only one retailer in a territory, and selling a mail order house, which would sell everywhere, would interfere with this arrangement. It was held that as it did not appear that the manufacturers had entered into any agreement not to sell the mail order house, the plan was not in violation of the law.

CASE No. 15.

This involved the cases of seve manufacturers, all of whom w complained of because they pointed exclusive distributors various places and refused to s anybody else. It was held t "neither the Clayton Act nor Federal Trade Commission prohibits manufacturers establish exclusive agencies, or assigning clusive territory to dealers."

CASE No. 20.

A manufacturer engaged in terstate commerce assigned exc sive territory to jobbers of product in various States and fused to sell to the applicant, a co peting jobber. Held, that the F eral Trade Commission Act and t Clayton Act do not prohibit mar facturers selling their product e clusively through one dealer in given territory. A refusal to sell others in such territory under su circumstances is therefore not lawful.

There were several other cas the same sort, which would s to settle the question; that is, settle one part of the question— right to appoint exclusive distr tors and to refuse to sell any oth

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Start Something.—The way to be somebody in a store is to start something. Not long since a fellow said, "I'm going to increase my sale in print butterine 100 pounds a week." He told it all over the store. He told the office people, the porters, the errand boys. The most important of all he told customers. Got out among the cheaper restaurant trade and "got" them.

He exceeded his hundred pounds.

If that can be done with butterine, an article that still carries with it an amount of prejudice, what can be done with a recognized staple, say, cheese, macaroni, asparagus or pork and beans.

We'll take the last one—pork and beans. There are many excellent brands packed in No. 3 cans that sell for 12 cents. Do you mean to say you can't sell a hundred of these in a week if you try?

You can if you "try" in the right way and in the right spirit.

Comparisons must be made so as to demonstrate your argument. You have the No. 1 can to work on that sells for 10 cents and the No. 2 that sells for 15 cents—good goods, none better. Nationally advertised into the bargain.

But your big No. 3 cans at 12 cents (or 10 cents if you want to do the thing up in style) has quality, too, and can be so proven by the people who know beans.

Much as the big advertisers assis disposing of our goods, it isn't q fair to allow them to do all the publi work. It comes high—quite high to party of the first part and the party the third part.

So face-to-face advertising is up to y

It's up to you to know when to gin, when to stop and what to say tween these two points. Whatever do, never knock another brand, esp ially if it's a standard one.

Just compare sizes and prices, but ways be in a position to guarantee q ity.

Constantly starting something and c rying it through gives a fellow a of confidence. Haven't you often ex rienced after leaving the store at n a sense of unusual achievement wh you did a thing well? Haven't y gone home with a lighter step, a brigh outlook and a more cheerful heart wh you—you yourself, started somethin

Why is it that this spirit is not d inant every night? It's because y slack up and then keep slacking t whereas if you held a tight grip of t rein and kept up a steady, wholeso advancing trot, the light step and t bright outlook and the cheerful he would become a fixed habit.

Not one of us can stand still and ke earning our salary. We must simp push ahead, knowing and realizing th "Unto him that hath shall be given."

e other phase of the question, whether it is lawful for a er to contract with his buyer not ell any other goods, has not yet n decided, for no case involving as yet been brought before the mission.

Question: W. H. Reynolds & , Valatie, N. Y.—We have an ount against a customer who re- s in New Jersey for groceries chased while at their summer e here. He owns this place e.

How shall we start to collect? r attorney adviscs us that the ts will be excessive unless we can rt suit against him in this State. do this it will be necessary for to wait until such time as he is New York State in order to serve necessary papers. Can you give any information?

Answer.—If your customer is a n-resident of New York, you can either issue foreign attachment against his placc in your State or wait till he comes back and sue him personally. Either of these would be preferable to suing in New Jersey. He will have to pay all court costs.

Pennsylvania News Items.

An ordinance now before City Council of Pittsburgh, Pa., providing that all persons who sell meat must pay a special license fee of $5 is branded unjust by the Retail Grocers' Protective Union in a communication to the city lawmakers, which says the fee would work a hardship on the small grocers and would have no effect whatever on the dealers who sell bad meat. It is pointed out that there are approximately 2,500 grocers in Pittsburgh, and of this number 85 per cent. sell a little smoked meat such as bacon and boiled ham. They say that it has always been the practice of grocers to handle smoked meat, and that it is generally considered a part of their regular line. Their meat profits, it is asserted, would not justify them in paying this new fee. The sale of even smoked meats from grocery stores is said to be very small, and not over 5 per cent. of the grocers in Pittsburgh handle any fresh meat. The Grocers' Union says the new fee would drive the smaller grocers, many of whom are widows supporting families, out of business, while such a law would impel the larger dealers who now handle a little smoked meat, to sell fresh meats as well. It is declared that such an ordinance, carrying thc same special fee, was found to be unconstitutional in a test case at Allcntown, Pa., and the dealcrs there wcre exempted from paying the additional tax.

Women Boycott Sugar.

The National Housewives' Co-operative League at a meeting in Cincinnati during the week declared a boycott on sugar and sent out communications to all branches of the league as well as to other women's societies urging co-operation in this movement. The league asserts that housewives use 90 per cent. of the sugar consumed in the United States and objects to the high price that they now have to pay.

The Quality Index

A STORE that sells high-grade merchandise fairly radiates an atmosphere of quality.

The real quality index is the confidence of the customers of the store. That confidence is born of the effort of the owner himself—an effort and intent to sell only goods that will give entire satisfaction to every customer every time.

The grocer who sells the products of National Biscuit Company secures for his store the buyer's confidence in his goods that could be had in no other way.

Quality -- Quantity -- Service -- Price

Quality is our aim. We will tell you the contents of our products. We are not backward about it. Quantity the amount you get, not what you expect, but WHAT YOU REALLY GET. Service—Courteous treatment at all times. Prompt delivery, Fair and Square Dealing to all. We know one customer's money is as good as another's. NO PREMIUM TRADING STAMPS or book accounts added to cost of our Groceries or they could not be sold at our regular low prices. Price—Our groceries are priced as low as the quality will permit consistent with good business operation. We do not misrepresent anything and would rather lose a sale than tell you anything not true about our goods.

GROVE'S CASH GROCERY

I do not like this introduction or the heading. There is nothing new or novel in it; it is simply the usual thing that merchants say about their stores. I don't believe that consumers pay the slightest attention to such claims any more. I should waste very little time or space on introductions; people are always in more or less of a hurry when they read advertisements, and they want to get at the meat of what you have to say. In other words, they don't want to hear any unnecessary talk.

* * *

The text of this advertisement, by which I mean the paragraphs, is distinctly good. It is the kind of advertising which I always consider particularly strong, and which I know will bring results if properly circulated. Advertising like this is real salesmanship in my judgment. It is akin to the talk of a good store salesman, showing goods and talking to a customer in the store. And this illustration of what advertising is supposed to be and do shows the weakness of long introductions. Can you imagine yourself or your clerks telling a customer all this that appears in your introduction? It would sound like a speech. You might make a remark or two about your prices or your service, but you would let it go at that. I don't believe in saying anything in an advertisement which you would not feel like saying, in the course of selling, to a customer in the store.

This matter is well written and is good selling talk. If I had gotten this circular up I would have sent it out with perfect confidence that I would hear from it with orders. The appearance would have been much improved, however, if the card had been about an inch larger all around. It is too small for the amount of type on it and looks skimpy. I have an impulse desire, whenever I see a person doing an absolutely fool thing like this, to take the next train out of his town and administer a swift kick where it would do the most good.

Why a Manufacturer Should Be Permitted to Fix the Retail Price of His Product

Views of Various Believers in This Doctrine Who Offer Them as Arguments for the Pending Stevens Bill.

[The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained and will from time to time present a series of statements by various well known persons who believe that the manufacturer should have the right to tell the retailer what price he must get for the manufacturer's product. All of the views which will be presented can be taken as arguments for the pending Stevens Bill, which seeks to give a manufacturer that right.—ED.]

No. 16.—By E. O. Snyder, Grocer, 1223 East Maine St., Columbus, O.

Mr. Snyder.—Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to thank you for the privilege of appearing before your committee and to speak in favor of the Stevens bill, known as H. R. 13,305, relative to the standardization of prices on trade-marked and patented articles. The small retailers are handicapped to-day by the methods of advertising and unfair principles of retailing by the chain store, department store and catalogue house. The resort to such methods to attract trade as bargain sales always taking goods that are nationally known and advertised and upon which the public get all that their money can buy, and also show the retailer a fair and reasonable profit, they in turn will advertise these goods at cost and below to attract trade, and then at the same time compel the customer to buy so much of other merchandise that is not known to them or may have an inferior quality which will give the merchant enough profit to make up the amount lost in the sale of the special cost price of these few well known brands. This in turn not only injures the manufacturer and retailer, but the consumer as well. The purchaser has not saved a penny by the transaction. She has lost money. She invariably buys more than she needs, just because it seems to be cheap. She often buys goods she does not need, saying that 10, 15 or 25 cents is not much; but, gentlemen, when much figured off of a $2 or $3 bill does mean something. It will lower the cost of living at from 5 to 10 per cent. She will also be compelled in most instances to buy some commodities that she knows nothing about.

She does not know the reputation of all manufacturers—whether or not they pack good goods or whether the factory complies with ood laws or not, or their facgroceries, so that I am forced to buy shoes, hats, furniture, clothing, etc. We are all consumers, the farmer included. He can not produce all he needs, so is forced to buy. He will be benefited by this law in the fact that when he wants to make his purchase he will be getting his money's worth, and that his neighbor can not buy it cheaper than he can. The day has passed with good merchants when the custom of trying to drive a good bargain by pulling the merchant down from his asking price to the lowest possible selling price. Think of the vast number who were not able to make these kind of purchases and who would help to make up the loss of the other fellows. We now are trying to have the common saying of "one price to all" be a reality instead of a misnomer, as is the case with some dealers. Let us stop the bargain sales, fire sales, bankruptcy sales, dissolution sales, etc., of which 95 per cent. are fakes, and put the business of the merchant on a firm basis, so that we can restore confidence and hope in this large number of smaller merchants. Make it possible for the housewife to send her children to all our stores and feel that they can purchase the article needed as cheaply and as well as she could herself. Knowing that you want to be fair to all classes in this matter, I hope you will consider the interests of we merchants. Make it possible for us to compete with these big octopuses who are slowly winding their tentacles around these small merchants and squeezing the life from them. You can readily see what the results will be when we are eliminated. History will prove that. The retailers have remained quiet so long and allowed these unscrupulous dealers to steal our business away, that we hope gentlemen of this committee, that you will pass this bill. I thank you.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

Stevens Bill Again Amended in Two Important Respects

The Measure Seeks to Give Manufacturers of Trade-Marked Goods the Right to Fix the Retail Price. Reintroduced in Senate Containing a Provision Allowing Special Sales Oftener Than Twice a Year, and Allowing the Price of an Article to be Cut if the Dealer Intends to Stop Selling It.

The so-called Stevens bill, which seeks to give the manufacturer of trade-marked products the right to fix the retail price, has been again amended and was reintroduced in the Senate during the week by Senator H. F. Ashurst of Arizona. Secretary Whittier, of the American Fair Trade League, who has now amended the bill twice, says that the latest changes are "inconsequential," but they are not. On the contrary, they are exceedingly important. The changes are as follows:—

1—"Disposal sales," meaning special sales during which a retailer may move his odds and ends at a price less than the manufacturer has fixed, can under the latest amended bill be held "at appropriate times." Under the first amendment they could only be held twice a year, which would of course have been of no benefit to dealers with four seasons. The original Stevens bill would have prevented all special sales.

2—Under the latest amendment a dealer may cut the price of a trade-marked article "if he shall decide to discontinue the sale of such article or articles," provided that he shall first offer them to the manufacturer or jobber who sold them, and the latter shall have refused to buy them back at cost. This provision was not contained in the first amended bill or in the original bill. It is a distinct concession. There is also a provision that if the retailer cuts the price for any such reason, he must file with the Federal Trade Commission his reason, and a description of the article cut.

The full text of the new bill is as follows:—

A BILL

To protect the public against dishonest advertising and false pretenses in merchandising.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in any contract for the sale of articles of commerce to any dealer, wholesale or retail, by any grower, producer, manufacturer or owner thereof, under trade-mark or special brand, hereinafter referred to as the "vendor," it shall be lawful for such vendor, whenever the contract constitutes a transaction of commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, or in any Territory of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory and another Territory, or between any such Territory or Territories and any States or the District of Columbia, or with a foreign nation or nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or a foreign nation or nations, to prescribe the uniform prices and manners of settlement at which the different qualities and quantities of each article covered by such contract may be resold: Provided, That the following conditions are complied with:—

(a) Such vendor shall not have any monopoly or control of the market for articles belonging to the same general class of merchandise as such article or articles of commerce as shall be covered by such contract of sale; nor shall such vendor be a party to any agreement, combination or understanding with any competitor in the production, manufacture or sale of any merchandise in the same general class in regard to the price at which the same shall be sold either to dealers at wholesale or retail or the public.

(b) Such vendor shall file at the office of the Federal Trade Commission a statement setting forth the trade-mark or special brand owned or claimed by such vendor in respect of such article or articles of commerce to be covered by such contract of sale, and also, from time to time as the same may be adopted or modified, a schedule setting forth the uniform price of the sale thereof to dealers at wholesale and the uniform price of sale thereof to dealers at retail, from whatever source acquired, and the uniform price of sale thereof to the public; and, upon filing such statement, such vendor shall pay to the Federal Trade Commission a registration fee of $10. Prices set forth in such schedule and made in any contract pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be uniform to all dealers in like circumstances, differing only as to grade, quality or quantity of such articles sold, the point of delivery and the manner of settlement, all of which differences shall be set forth in such schedule; and there shall be no discrimination in favor of any vendee by the allowance of a discount, rebate or commission for any cause or by grant of any special concession or by any other device whatsoever.

(c) Such contract for the sale of such article or articles of commerce may provide for disposal sales at appropriate times, during which periods, duly set forth in such statement or in such schedule of prices as shall be filed by such vendor, such dealers may sell such article or articles of commerce for a price other than the uniform price as set forth in the schedule provided in the preceding paragraph (b): Provided, That such article or articles of commerce shall have first been offered to the vendor by such dealer, by written offer, at the price paid for the same by such dealer, and that such vendor not less than thirty days prior to the date set forth for the next disposal sale, after reasonable apportunity to inspect such article or articles, shall have refused or neglected to accept such offer.

(d) Any article of commerce or any carton, package or other receptacle inclosing an article or articles of commerce covered by such contract and in the possession of a dealer may be sold for a price other than the uniform price for resale by such dealer for such quality and quantity as set forth in the schedule provided in the preceding paragraph (b): First, if such dealer shall decide to discontinue the sale of such article or articles of commerce, or if such dealer shall cease to do business and the sale is made in the course of winding up the business of such dealer, or if such dealer shall have become bankrupt or a receiver of the business of such dealer shall have been appointed: Provided, (a) That such article or articles of commerce shall have first been offered to the vendor thereof by such dealer or the legal representative of such dealer by written offer, at the price paid for the same by such dealer, and that such vendor after reasonable opportunity to inspect such article or articles shall ha refused or neglected to accept su offer: Provided, (b) That su dealer, or the legal representati of such dealer, shall file at t office of the Federal Trade Co mission a statement setting fo the reason for such sale, the r fusal or neglect of such vendor accept such offer, and the gra quality and quantity of such arti or articles of commerce to be sol or, second, if such article of co merce or contents of such cart package or other receptacle sh have become damaged, deteriorat or soiled: Provided, That su damaged, deteriorated or soiled a ticle shall have first been offered the vendor by such dealer by wr ten offer, at the price paid for t same by such dealer, or at the o tion of such vendor, in exchan for similar articles not damag deteriorated or soiled, and that su vendor after reasonable opportuni to inspect such articles or articl shall have refused or neglected accept such offer, and that su damaged, deteriorated or soiled a ticle shall thereafter only be o fered for sale by such dealer wi prominent notice to the purchas that such article is damaged, det iorated or soiled, and that the pri thereof is reduced because of su damage.

Sec. 2. That the provisions of th act shall not apply in cases of sal of such article or articles of co merce to the United States, or cases of sales of such articles any State or public library, or any society or institution incor rated or established solely for ligious, philosophical, education medical, scientific, philanthropic literary purposes, made in go faith for use thereof by such soci or institution.

The National's Complaint Against Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s Sugar Scheme.

Extract From Complaint Filed by National Retail Grocers' Association With Federal Trade Commission Against Chicago Mail Order House. Claims the Cut-Price Sugar Scheme is Unfair Commission Because It Is Trickery.

In a recent issue it was stated that the National Association of Retail Grocers had filed a formal complaint with the Federal Trade Commission against Sears, Roebuck & Co., the Chicago mail-order house, the charge being based on the scheme of selling sugar at a cut price when bought with other goods. We have just received an official copy of the complaint, and extract the following from it, showing its tenor:—

As illustrative of the methods by which the defendant conducts its merchandising business in interstate commerce, the following is a copy of an advertisement widely circulated by the defendant in the year 1915 throughout the United States:—

THE BIG SUGAR OFFER.

For September and October, 33⅓ pounds best granulated sugar for $1 with each $10 worth of groceries not including sugar of any kind or flour of any kind. Under this offer you can cut your sugar cost in half during September and October; but do not order until you have read the offer on page 1, and understand it thoroughly. IT CUTS YOUR SUGAR COST IN TWO.

That said defendant is, and h for a long time been continuous using the United States mails interstate commerce for the purp of soliciting business by this "tri method."

The said method of merchand ing practiced by the defendant interstate commerce tends to c ate prejudice against and to d stroy the business of retail me chants throughout the country a constitutes an unfair method competition intended to demorali and destroy the business of compe tors and promote the developm of a monopoly in trade.

Wherefore these complainan ask that the facts herein alleged investigated and that an order entered by the Federal Trade Co mission declaring the interstate se ing, offering or advertising for s of one or more articles of merch dise by any person, firm or corp ration on the condition that t purchaser shall buy any article articles of personal property, sh be deemed an unfair method competition, and that the defend be prohibited from the interst selling, offering or advertising f sale of one or more articles of m chandise upon the condition th the purchaser shall buy an article articles of merchandise, and f such other and further relief may be deemed equitable.

Speaking of Our Queen Isabella Standardized Coffee

¶ This is one of the lines of Harisco Standardized Coffee, as to which, let us say again, there are two vital points: 1, the very highest possible quality, and 2, absolute uniformity.

¶ A grocer who took our word that Queen Isabella held possibilities for him has written us that one of his customers said it was :—

"The best coffee I have ever drank."

¶ Another grocer who also took the brand up wrote that one of his customers told him Queen Isabella was

"The finest brand I have ever had in my house."

¶ Which means that this coffee has these two customers nailed down—as long as it continues to be what they have found it—and that is where the absolute uniformity of these coffees comes in. It will continue to be that way forever.

Status of the Stevens Bill.

Touching the status of the Stevens bill, now pending in Congress, which would give the manufacturer of trade-marked articles the right to fix the retail price, news from Washington indicates that the bill has little if any chance of passage. Congress is afraid to touch it, according to report, and is not altogether certain of the good faith of the American Fair Trade League, which is the main promoter of the bill. A recent Washington dispatch thus describes the situation:—

> Members of Congress are not absolutely convinced as to the merits of the basis contention. It is not known whether the majority of the people of this country would benefit through the price maintenance system or whether or not consumers would be better protected by means of the competitive system which permits a freedom in cutting prices. The American Fair Trade League has advanced some very significant arguments to the effect that consumers would be protected by the price maintenance system from fraud, etc., things which are far more costly than any addition that may be made to prices through the maintenance system.
> On the other hand there has recently been organized a body to refute the claims of the American Fair Trade League. This is known as the National Trade Association, of which a Mr. Caldwell is president. The vice-president of the new association is P. S. Straus, of R. H. Macy & Co., New York. It has been said by the price maintenance proponents that Mr. Caldwell is head of a trading stamp company, and that Macy & Co. is "the most notorious predatory cut-rate concern in the country." No argument against the motives of the National Trade Association, however, can be made because of this, and in just this way the American Fair Trade League is injuring its own course. By attempting to impugn the motives of their opponents, the proponents of the price maintenance bill are endangering their position before Congress.
> The keener the fight between these two organizations becomes the more the country is likely to learn about the purposes of price maintenance, even though the fight is largely one of personalities. On the other hand, the more personal becomes the dispute, the less likely is Congress to have anything to do with the matter. This is one more reason why the proposed measure stands very little chance at the present session.

There is also considerable doubt whether any price-fixing law which could be passed by Congress could be generally enforced. The theory on which Congress is asked to pass the law, rather than the States, is first, the idea that it is easier to get one law passed than forty-five, and second, that many contracts for the sale of merchandise are interstate and only a Federal law could touch them. But to show how that theory falls short, a New York manufacturer contracts with a Philadelphia jobber to sell him bottled catsup, on the condition permitted by the Stevens bill that the resale price—that is, the price from jobber to retailer—should be so much. Undoubtedly the Stevens bill would apply to such a contract, because it would be interstate, and the jobber who signed it would be forced to obey it or account in damages.

So far so good. But the other end of the transaction—the sale from jobber to retailer—is of far greater importance to the manufacturer than the sale to the jobber. Usually the jobber and the retailer will be in the same State. A fixed price contract between jobber and retailer would, if both were in the same State, not be subject to any Federal law at all, because it would not be an interstate transaction. Therefore the jobber's contract with the retailer for the purpose of fixing the retail price, could probably not be enforced at all; certainly it could not be enforced unless the State had passed a law similar to the Stevens bill, which is not likely.

The Stevens bill, even if it passes, which is doubtful, cannot in my judgment do what its backers expect it to do, unless the manufacturer is in one State, the jobber in a second, and the retailer in a third; or unless a manufacturer in one State sells direct to a retailer in another.

Greed as a Parcels Post Obstacle.

I have all along contended that the Government's efforts to get farmers to go after consumers' fruit and vegetable business through the medium of the parcels post, would never amount to much because the farmers are neither enterprising nor systematic, but on the other hand are greedy and grasping and expect consumers to tumble over each other to buy of them simply because they are farmers.

Read the following from "Suggestions for Parcel Post Marketing," issued by the Government:—

> There is no reason why farmers cannot make extensive use of parcels post under certain conditions if they will. It has been found that one of the chief factors in preventing the satisfactory development of parcel post marketing has been the prices asked by some farmers for produce. To illustrate: One farmer's wife was receiving 20 cents a pound for butter in her local market, a country store. When asked if she would be willing to ship it to a city by parcel post, and at what price, she replied that she would do so at 50 cents a pound. Would-be purchasers frequently have been known to offer producers a lower price than they can obtain in their local markets. It is needless to say that such imperfect and erron ideas as to proper and equi prices altogether defeat the pos ity of marketing produce by p post. Business in marketin parcel post can be secured and only by shipping produce of quality and by charging reaso prices.

Just what this paper has times argued. If some good ness man were to organiz farmers, and manage them i parcel post business, retailers have cause for fear, but tha never be done.

Hard Sense.

Nobody can read the decis the Buffalo Municipal Court the right of islature to scribe an arl time limit holding food in storage, w being impressed that it is the st est kind of common sense. S Legislatures have passed law ing that nobody must keep egg instance, longer than six, or or nine months, as the case m Attempt to sell after the time is punishable by fine or imp ment. Nothing as to the dition of the eggs. They may perfect condition—better tha current fresh eggs, in fact. makes no difference. If they been in more than the pres time, that ends it.

The Buffalo court says in its sion, that that doesn't end it shouldn't end it and won't b lowed to end it. It is arbitrary reasonable, confiscatory. The ground on which to deny to a product its right of sale is tha not fit for sale. This is so clea sensible that it seems as if no could disagree with it.

Running Down Libels on Canned Goods

How the Secretary of the National Canners' Association Goes After Newspapers Who Usually Incorrectly Attribute Illness or Death to Eating Canned Goods.

One of the chief jol s of the secretary of the National Canners' Association is to watch newspapers all over the country for libels on the canning industry. Newspapers have a fashion of publishing items of sickness or death under such headings as "Canned Salmon Kills Janitor," or something like that, before any real conclusion can be reached as to whether salmon was responsible or not. The result is a deepening of the prejudice which many people hold against canned foods, believing them to be unwholesome.

Whenever the secretary of the National Canners' Association sees such an item he investigates it, and if he can convict the paper which published it of error, he insists on a correction. A copy of the report covering these cases for the last year has been sent to this p and makes very interesting rea All told there were fifty-six and in the majority of them it found that there was no found whatever for the publication re ing on canned goods. Many o cases were pure frame-u schemes to hold a canner up damages. Others were the of some newspaper which m wanted a sensational item. I latter cases the parties had n thought of blaming the can-

; in some cases not even the ned goods were blamed.
)ne of the newspaper items was ded: "Ptomaine Kills Janitor—

he trouble with a correction,

Cotton Seed Oil Products in Bad Shape.

Price Exceedingly High and Scarcity is Growing Acute. Price About Fifty Per Cent. Above Normal and Stock May be Entirely Exhausted by Summer.

The condition of the cottonseed oil market is affecting all cottonseed oil products, such as soaps, cooking oils, etc. The current quotation is 73 cents a gallon crude, against a normal price of not over 50 cents, and often less than that. The market has advanced 7 cents within a few days.

The cause is the condition caused by the war. There is a very large shortage in cotton, and to aggravate that, a way has been discovered of making glycerine—a much needed product just now—from cottonseed.

Some holders of cottonseed oil predict that by late summer there will be no cottonseed oil in the United States.

Interesting Decision Involving Grocer's Liability for Injury Done by Fresh Pork. Department Store Head Gives Figures to Show That There is Very Little Cut-Price Advertising of Trademarked Goods. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, March 24, 1916.

An interesting case involving the liability of a grocer for injury to a customer by goods sold by him has been decided by the New York Supreme Court. The plaintiff was a woman named Rinaldi, and the defendant was the Mohican Company, which maintains a number of chain stores throughout the Eastern States. The court gave the plaintiff $1,000. It appears that the woman bought some pork from the Mohican Company and was poisoned by it. The meat appeared clean, good and wholesome and bore the Government stamp to that effect, but there was some evidence that it was infected with trichina and was unfit for food. The plaintiff and her whole family were made ill, and she sued the Mohican Company on the theory that it was understood by implication that the pork was warranted fit for food. Although it was admitted that the defendant's store was perfectly clean and sanitary, and that there was nothing about the meat from which it could be told that it was unfit for food, the court held that there was an implied warranty and upheld the judgment. A portion of the opinion is as follows:—

> The implied warranty rule rests upon a principle of public policy. The reason for that rule is stated in Wiedeman vs. Keller (171 Ill., 93), as follows: "It may be said that the rule is a harsh one, but as a general rule, in the sale of provisions, the vendor has so many more facilities for ascertaining the soundness or unsoundness of the article offered for sale which are not possessed by the purchaser that it is much safer to hold the vendor liable than it would be to compel the purchaser to assume the risk." If this is the principle on which the rule rests no amount of care can relieve the vendor. The Government stamp adds nothing to his position, for he has warranted the goods, and whether he has been careful or careless is of no concern.
> This doctrine was applied squarely by the Supreme Court of Illinois in Wiedeman vs. Keller (supra), where many leading authorities were examined. That was a sale of meat, and was practically parallel with the case before us. In view of the attitude which this court has assumed, the Wiedeman case should have great weight with us.

There was one very interesting feature of this decision and it was that while the judge who wrote the opinion upheld the theory of implied warranty, he expressly stated that he did so because the court had committed itself to it in two recent cases, and that his personal belief was that this theory should be eliminated from the law. The judge in question stated that he believed it would be more just to a retail dealer to hold him only for negligence and not as an absolute warrantor of the quality of the food which he sold. The reason why that was considered the fairer rule was that just as in the Mohican case, there were instances in which the retailer could not possibly tell, without a chemical examination of everything in his store, whether there was any unfitness for food. The judge believed that it was proper to hold the retailer up to the obligation of taking every reasonable safeguard as to the quality of the food that he sold, but not to go beyond that.

Percy S. Straus, president of R. H. Macy & Co., department storekeepers, made an address at a luncheon in this city last Wednesday, in which he said that the passage of the Stevens bill would automatically eliminate free price conditions among merchandise distributors and abolish the consumer's privilege of buying where he wants, what he wants, and at the lowest possible price. Mr. Straus analyzed the whole bill and appeared to find many flaws in it, particularly regarding the practical phases of its application. Mr. Straus said that he had made an analysis of the advertising which was done by Boston stores over a period of two weeks and out of a total of 128,249 agate lines of advertising done during the period named, only 90 lines, or one-fourteenth of 1 per cent., were devoted to advertising trademarked goods at cut prices.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet but steady; Japans still very firm.—Coffee futures have been weak, but closed the week somewhat stronger. Rio coffee quiet and unchanged; Santos quiet and firm.—Sugar a little changed for the week; raws steady, a shade easier but not much. Refined unchanged.—Canned tomatoes dull with some little decline in price, though no material decline.—Corn steady to firm on demand. Peas quiet and unchanged.—Salmon scarce, particularly high grade Alaska, and tending higher.—Sardines unchanged; imported and domestic are scarce. Currants are scarce and firm. Prunes unsettled on account of English embargo; prices easier. Balance of dried fruits unchanged. Wheat still uncertain and declined during the week somewhat weaker. Flour shows a decline of about 25c. a barrel for the week; demand light.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The demand is still good and the entire situation is healthy and active. Prices are unchanged for the week. Perhaps Blacks are feeling a little firmer, but there is no quoted advance.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos has been somewhat weaker during the week without any quotable decline, except in options. The cause of the weakness is the report that Brazil has taken over a number of German vessels and will therefore be able to ship coffee to this country which could not be shipped before because of the lack of vessels. Actual coffee has not yet become affected by this, but is reasonably sure to be later if it proves to be correct. Milds are still firm and in fair demand. Java is very scarce and high. Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market is about as it was a week ago. Raws have eased off a trifle but are still quoted at 5.79. Refiners are still quoting 6.90 to 7 cents for granulated and the entire situation is just about as strong as it has been at any time. There appears to be no reason for expecting any materially lower prices in the near future. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week and so does compound syrup. The demand is seasonably fair. Sugar syrup is exceedingly high and is working higher all the time. The demand is light. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

There is no change to report in mackerel during the week. The situation is just about as it has been, stocks being very low and prices correspondingly high. There is a regular demand all the time, but it is greatly curtailed on account of the high prices. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged in price and in fair demand. Salmon is still wanted, and low grade Alaska brands are firm. Horse Shoe salmon advanced 5 cents during the week, but the balance of the line is unchanged. Imported sardines are still very scarce and very high. Domestic sardines quoted at ruling prices.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes remain unchanged from a week ago. The demand, though very small, seems to be taking all the offerings, thus keeping the market steady. There is no important change in sight. Corn is in good shape though unchanged for the week. Demand very fair. Peas quiet and still inclined to be heavy. Apples are very dull but at unchanged prices. California canned goods show no change anywhere, and a fair seasonable demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The butter market is very active and the prices on the top grades are unchanged, but under grades show an advance of 2 to 3 cents per pound. Consumptive demand for butter is very active and the market is firm. If there is any change it will likely be a slight advance.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm on the present basis—no quotations, with a fair consumptive demand. The quality arriving is the best of the season and no immediate change seems in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm with a moderate consumptive demand and very light stocks. Quotations have been advanced ¼ cent during the week. The market is firm throughout on the present basis, but seems unlikely to make any radical change.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats, including picnic hams, regular hams, skinback, bellies and bacon are in good consumptive demand at unchanged prices. Pure lard and compound are unchanged and in moderate demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are all unchanged and in fair demand, but canned meats are due to go higher, on account of the high prices of raw material. Some holde already advanced canned bo

Here's the Living Limit.

You know I've had a good bit to say from time to time about getting along with partners and all that sort of thing. If you fellows ever read my guff you'll remember that my feelings about taking a partner are pretty strong. A lot of fellows take a partner the same way they buy a necktie. "Oh, if I don't like it after I get it I don't have to wear it."

The difference being that you do have to wear your partner. Therefore, says I, you ought to do the same amount of thinking when you take a partner that you do when you take a wife.

Well, I've got one to give you on this subject now that's the real human limit. I've run up against some pretty tough nuts, but I ain't ever run up against one like this before, and I don't expect to ever do it again.

This thing is going on in a little town over in New Jersey. It's a place of 600 people and the only store in it is this one I'm talking about.

It's run by a couple of brothers. They're the owners of it and partners.

They ain't spoke to one another for fifteen years!

Partners, running a store! Just try to get that, will you!

Oh my!

The scrap started over their father. One of 'em came down on him for something—I don't know what, and I'll bet they've forgot too by now—and the other took up for him. They had a hot fight that neither of 'em had the gumption to settle and get over with, and then they settled down to not speaking.

For fifteen years they ain't said a word to each other, though they're half owners in the store and are in it every day! By gum, you can hardly believe it, can you?

They tell me the foolkiller never goes to towns of less than a thousand people; I suppose that's the reason. Two funerals would look mighty good in that town, seems to me.

Now I suppose you can stop speaking to your partner, and the business still might go on all right. The only thing it would do would be to make you blamed uncomfortable if you were a human being instead of a mule. But in this Jersey case they're fighting in one way or another all the time.

Here's a thing that happened only last week. A salesman went in there to sell a certain line of goods that the store had been handling for a year. A year ago when he sold 'em, it was to one of the brothers I'll call Bill. When he went in there the other day the other brother Charlie was there alone. Bill was out. Charlie wouldn't buy 'em; that was his way of getting square with Bill for buying 'em last year!

But that ain't anything—listen to this: When one of the brothers buys anything, he has to get some outside teamster to haul it in: the other won't let the store team do it!

Oh joy, oh gladness!

Mustn't those wooden-headed Indians look forward to going down to the store in the mornings? Mustn't life be a happy thing to 'em both?

I wonder how their families get along? I didn't find that out, but I have my idea. If the thing has lasted this long, their wives must be the same kind of people as the husbands. If they wasn't they'd have found a way to end it long before this.

Now you know I've stopped speaking to a bunch of people in my time. Everybody has. But I'll tell you this—nobody on top of the earth could make me live with anybody that I didn't think was good enough to speak to. I wouldn't do it if I had to light out and leave everything I owned behind me. Life's so blamed short that I want all the peace and comfort I can get.

I'll tell you what those two ginks need. They need a little old style religion, that's what they need. I was going to say that they wanted a little horse sense, but I guess they're way beyond that. If they ever had any sense it's dried up long ago.

If I wasn't so fat and flabby d'ye know what I'd do? I'd go in that store some day with a couple of sets of brass knuckles on and I'd call out to those brothers: "Here, Bill and Charlie, you come here, both of you. I want you should come here together."

They wouldn't come of course, and then I'd go after 'em. I'd give one a clip alongside the head and he'd come. Then I'd go give the other one a clip and he'd come. And when I had 'em both standing up before me with their hands on their sore ears, I'd tell 'em in a few well chosen words that they were more kinds of blamed fools that was ever mixed up in one person before, and when I was out of breath and couldn't talk any more, I'd say to Bill: "Bill, you shake hands with Charlie." Bill wouldn't do it and then I'd kick him in the stomach. He'd do it then, and I'd say to Charlie: "Charlie, you shake back." And if he didn't shake back I'd poke one of his eyes out. Then he'd shake back all right.

By rights they ought to kiss each each other—own brothers and after fifteen years and all, but they might be backy chewers and I wouldn't want to kill 'em, just when things were coming out all right.

I wouldn't leave that store till that fuss was over. I'd lick 'em black and blue before I'd le 'em. You know a good would serve 'em right—tw who'll do a thing like tha anything but babies a Babies, that's all they are, a ought to be made to wear d the store.

The cases at bar are glaring examples of the unreasonableness of such a statute.

The defendant McFall had the chickens in storage for his own private use, while the defendant Tuttle was a dealer in poultry; yet upon the mere fact that this poultry had been in storage far more than ten months, the defendants were compelled summarily to dispose of the same, regardless of the fact of its unfitness for use.

The State offered no evidence upon the question of fitness. It simply proved the prima facie case as required by statute and rested. The overwhelming proof on the part of both defendants in question was that the food was absolutely wholesome. Evidence was introduced showing experiments that had been made with great care by the Health Department of the city of Buffalo, which showed that poultry kept in cold storage was absolutely wholesome long after ten months.

I do not think that the State can successfully contend that poultry properly kept in cold storage is unfit for use in ten months. If it is actually unfit for consumption the Health Commission has the power to destroy it under the section above referred to, and Section 337 is consequently unnecessary and need not be invoked by the Health Commissioner in order to protect the community.

There is a decision by the New York Supreme Court which says that the provision of the law prescribing an arbitrary time limit for cold storage food is constitutional, and Judge Noonan referred to this case, but said the facts were somewhat different from the case he was deciding.

No. 356.—When You Can't Use Your Own Name in Business.

There is a popular idea that every man has a fundamental right to use his own name in his business, and that nothing will be allowed to interfere with that. This is a mistake. Time and time again the courts have peremptorily stopped a man from using his own name in connection with his own business, the reason for such action always being that to let him use his name as he proposed to do, would work an injustice to somebody else. The following letter brings all this up and will enable me to explain it. The subject is of importance to everybody in business, whether manufacturer, wholesaler or retailer:—

Jersey City, N. J.

I hope you will pardon me for trespassing upon your time, but the question is so pressing and important that I feel I should like to have your views. My grandfather made a medicinal preparation—he was a doctor and druggist—which came to have quite a demand, and which came to be called "Foster's Powders." He left the business to my father, who continued to sell the preparation under the same name, "Foster's Powders." It is an old-fashioned formula, which has never been improved or changed in any way, and which contains, in the light of modern science, several unnecessary ingredients. There is also one ingredient which I claim is harmful.

My own name is Foster, of course, and I have taken a course in chemistry and also in pharmacy. I believe I can improve the formula very decidedly, and proposed to my father that I do so, but he refuses, and I decided to put a powder of my own on the market called the "Improved Foster Powders." I had my preparations nearly made when I was served with notice by a lawyer that suit would be started against me if I went ahead. There is no doubt that my powder would be better than the old one, and as my name is Foster, what right has anyone to interfere with me? Please give me your advice, as my future business is at stake.

Yours truly,
R. K. Foster.

This is a very good type of the cases in which the courts have uniformly refused to let a man use his own name in business. In many cases the thing is done deliberately, in order to butt into a success and gather a part of somebody else's harvest. A man named Blank will establish a chewing gum, let us say. He advertises it and exploits it, and Blank's chewing gum becomes well known all over the United States. Another man named Blank, who may or may not be in the chewing gum business, says to himself, "Here, I might just as well get some of this good thing that is coming to the name of Blank. I will pack chewing gum, too and sell it as Blank's chewing gum." Nine times out of ten that is the motive, and the courts recognizing that, have no scruple in striking down the scheme as soon as it appears.

Sometimes the motive is perfectly honest, but the court's action is the same, if the result would be to confuse the public and send to the second man some trade worked up by the first man.

When I refer to cases which refuse a man the right to use his own name in business, I ought to say that the refusal is to allowing him to use his own name in such a way that the public may confuse it with a similar name which came into the market first. Of course he can use it unrestrictedly in other ways.

Here is an extract from a very recent case in which the quarrel was between two men named Case, both of whom wished to make plows and call them Case plows. One man had been making Case plows for years before the other decided he would do it:—

> The legal principles which are controlling here are simply the principles of old-fashioned honesty. One man may not reap where another has sown, nor gather where another has strewn. A man may manufacture and sell unpatented articles and use his own name in doing so, but if another has previously and rightfully made that name valuable as a trade-mark descriptive of the same kind of goods, he has created a property right therein which may not be appropriated by a subsequent manufacturer, even though he bears the same name, and if necessary to prevent that result, conditions and limitations upon the use of the name will be enforced by the courts, which will preserve to the first manufacturer the fruits of his industry and prevent the public from being misled.
> There may be found many cases, which, say in substance, that a man cannot be deprived of the right to use his name in lawful business by reason of the fact that the same name has become a trade name used by another, and this is undoubtedly true, but it does not mean that it may be used at all times or on all surfaces or in all possible ways; in a word, it does not mean that the use may not be subjected to such conditions as are adequate to protect the public against deception and business competitors against unfair competition.

In the plow case the court protected the first maker of Case plows by enjoining the second from making "Case" plows, though of course the second man's right to make plows under some other name was not attacked at all. Thus would the court act in every such case, including, I am clear, the case submitted to me above.

California Raisin Crop Three Times That of Spain.

The California raisin crop is now about three times as large as that of Spain, according to a recent publication of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. About 60 per cent. of this crop is grown in Fresno County alone. Last year it is estimated that the entire California crop amounted to 250,000,000 pounds. Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find a circular letter which I am sending out. Please criticise same and also tell me if you consider it very good policy to advertise by such letters.

Yours truly,
P. E. CULLOM.

The letter enclosed was on the regular letter-head of the store. It was typewritten or very cleverly mimeographed or multigraphed—if it wasn't original typewriting it looked so much like it that nobody could tell the difference. The name of the address, however, was filled in at the top in a different colored ink, which always looks bad. It makes the letter look like a circular. Here is the letter, much reduced:—

McCOMB, MISS., February 28, 1916.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Smith,
McComb, Mississippi.

Dear friends:-

Do you want to save money? Everyone has or should have the desire to lay up something for a rainy day.

We take this method and opportunity of explaining the change that Cullums store has undergone and the basis upon which we are now operating.

We are now buying everything for cash, getting the cash discount and sell for cash strictly. We have but one price for everybody and our method is to give the best service and sell the best goods at as reasonable a price as it is possible for anyone to do. Between you and I, doesn't it sound reasonable that a store run on a "Safety First" plan can afford to sell at a smaller margin of profit? In this way the good do not have to pay for what is lost on the bad.

You people must help us out in this proposition in order that we can help you. The writer is a home boy and intends to build his business on honest and fair dealings.

We ask that you please give this a trial and finally get your grocery business on a cash basis.

Yours very truly,
Peter E Cullom Mgr

P.S.C.--:-L.B.T. THE GOLDEN RULE STORE.

This letter is all right, but I shouldn't expect it to accomplish a great deal. I do not think it is especially strong, and there is considerable matter in it which could have better been omitted. For instance the first paragraph. It is obvious that everybody wants to save money, therefore any discussion of the subject is superfluous. The letter could have better begun in this way: "Let me tell you how you can save some money."

* * *

Next take the second paragraph: It is too long. "Have you heard about our change?" would have said everything and saved two lines. The balance of the letter is good enough as an argument, but people who are being asked to pay cash after buying on credit don't want argument; they want to be shown. Either in your advertising or by word of mouth, you will have to show them that paying cash will benefit them. In sending out a letter like this, I should get all the argument into a very few lines. I should say that I was now buying for cash and getting the cash discounts, which I was never able to do before and which appreciably reduced the cost of the goods. I was also selling now for cash, which cut out a lot of bookkeeping and reduced the selling price. That is really the whole story of the cash business. After I had said that, I should fill the rest of the space with illustrations—figures showing what I had always had to charge for a certain article under the credit plan, and what I could now sell it for under the cash plan. That's the sort of thing that gets the people. Even that won't get them all, but it will get all that anything will get. I don't believe that letters like Mr. Cullom's, containing nothing but argument without illustration, will convince consumers whose convenience is being threatened.-

Make the Salesman Tell You Why

Here and there you will find a retailer who asks every strange salesman, before he lets him talk, whether he uses a specialty stamp on his orders. If he says no, there is no deal.

This is pretty radical, and we don't advocate it. Every salesman, presumably honest and hard working, should be given a chance to tell his tale.

But we do believe this:—that if he says he doesn't use the stamp, he should be made to give an exceedingly good reason why, before his unstamped order is signed.

If his company and his goods are all right, there cannot be a good reason why he doesn't use the specialty stamp.

you're not buying fruit and vegetables comfortably or right, send us one order

¶ It may be that we're the house you have been looking for all the time. The house you can send an order to and know that it will be filled with the best the market will give us, and that the price will be fair.

¶ Houses you can feel that way toward are scarce. We say what we said last week—a house has to be in business a long while to realize fully that satisfying the customer is sometimes more important than profit. We have been in business fifty-five years.

¶ Are you receiving our price-list regularly each week? If not, a postal will bring it to your desk.

THE VALUE OF BRIGHT STORES

¶ The difficulty of making a sale—whether it be dry goods or vegetables, jewelry or shoes is increased tenfold in a poorly lighted store. Other things being equal, the Electrically lighted shop will do more business than the store which uses other illuminants. "Indoor Daylight" can only be obtained by the use of Mazda Electric lamps.

How Much is the Good Will of Your Store Worth?

It takes more than stock and fixtures to make a profitable business.

You must have good will—and good will is nothing more or less than the confidence your customers have in the goods you sell and the way you sell them.

When you carry nationally advertised products like the "57 Varieties" you get the benefit of a good will already created for you.

Let your customers know that you have Heinz products by keeping them well displayed and using the connective advertising which will be furnished you on request.

Ask our salesmen for Heinz Dealer Helps,—and tie the demand for the "57 Varieties" up to your store.

There are other washing helps beside Chase-O, but every other has some weak point. One distributes the bluing unevenly, another gums the clothes up with paraffine, and so on.

Chase-O is an absolutely perfect product. It will cut the work of washing in half. We would be exceedingly foolish to make this statement if it wasn't true. Try Chase-O yourself, and then tell your customers what it did for you. Used with boiling water and a little soap. Nickel a box and good profit.

Do You Trust Your Jobber? Very Well, Then Do as He Says About This

If you have any doubt as to whether you should discriminate between signing specialty orders with a stamp on, and signing orders without the stamp on, write a jobber in whom you have absolute confidence and ask him.

Ask him this: "Should I be any more ready to sign stamped specialty orders than I am to sign unstamped specialty orders?"

Without the slightest doubt he will tell you that for your protection—and if you want the orders delivered promptly and surely—you should confine your specialty orders, as far as possible, to those on which one or the other of the above stamps appear. But whatever he tells you, do as he says.

Year After Next

How can you best build up your soft drink business so that it will grow this year, next year, and year after next? This is a fair question and an important one to you, because the popularity of ginger ale in the home is already great and is destined to grow.

You will agree that a fair answer to the question above is: "By offering to my customers the brand of soft drinks which is most popular, of the best quality, and put out by the house which does the most to help me sell it."

The only brand of American made Ginger Ale which is known the country over is Clicquot Club; no one disputes this fact. The knowledge or popularity of any other American ginger ale is merely local or sectional. The Clicquot Club Company will continue its extensive advertising and make this name even better known everywhere.

Money cannot buy purer or better ingredients than go into Clicquot Club Ginger Ale—and many years of experience have shown us how to make the blend which will best please 94 people out of 100. Just let people know that you have Clicquot Club. They will order because they know about it; our advertising and the reputation their friends give it have told them about it. They will re-order because they like it; they will serve it to their guests and get others to buy It.

We believe the logic of all this is that you can best build up big volume of ginger ale business for this year, next year and the year after, by letting your customers know that you carry Clicquot Club, the recognized leader of ginger ales.

Soaps That Differ in Price But Not So Much in Quality

Food Department Analyzes Twelve Well-known Soaps and Finds Very Little Difference in Quality or Characeter, But an Enormous Differenee in Price. Range All the Way From 23 Cents per Aetual Pound to $1.40.

We have received from the North Dakota Food Department some interesting matter regarding several of the leading brands of laundry and toilet soap now on the market. The Department has analyzed these brands and makes the following interesting comment: "There is not sufficient difference in the purity or quality between these several brands to altogether account for the marked difference in selling price."

The brands analyzed were Fairy soap, Wool soap, Jap Rose, Ivory, Palm Olive, Pears Unscented, Pears Glycerine, Big Bath (Colgate), Glycerine Tonic (Armour), Hazel Cream (Armour), Castile (Contis), Castile (Colgate) and Imperial Peroxide (Peet Bros.). The Department found a tremendous variance in the cost of these to the consumer, with very little difference in the real character or value. For instance, Wool soap costs the consumer 23.3 cents per full pound of soap. Pears Glycerine costs the consumer $1.40 per pound, Jap Rose costs 57.9 cents per pound and so on. Below is the full table:—

Name of Manufacturer.	Brand.	Weight of Cake (oz.)	Price per Cake (cts.)	Cost to Purchaser of 1 lb. Actual Soap.
A. & F. Pears Ltd.	Glycerin	3.4	25	$1.40 cts.
A. & F. Pears Ltd.	Unscented	3.4	15	80.48
N. K. Fairbanks	Fairy	4.0	5	24.3
Swift & Co.	Wool	7.5	10	23.3
	Jap Rose	4.9	10	57.9
Proctor & Gamble	Ivory	5.0	5	19.68
B. J. Johnson Co.	Palm Olive	4.3	10	41.44
Colgate & Co.	Big Bath	5.7	10	30.56
Armour & Co.	Glycerin Tonic	5.2	10	48.8
Armour & Co.	Hazel Cream	4.5	5	24.48
A. Contis	Castile	2.3	10	74.72
Colgate & Co.	Castile	3.7	10	46.24
Peet Bros.	Imperial Peroxide.	6.7	10	26.72

The Department includes in its report some exceedingly interesting information regarding the character of floating soaps, transparent soaps, etc., which is here in part reproduced:—

> Floating Soaps.—These derive their ability to float on water through the incorporation of minute air bubbles in the process of manufacture. These air bubbles are too small to be visible, and present in such countless numbers that they succeed in so lightening the soap cake that it will easily float. In addition they greatly increase the surface of the soap exposed to water, and thus render it much more soluble. The mere fact that a soap is lighter than water and consequently floats is no criterion of its purity, but this property of floating should nevertheless be regarded as a desirable one for the reasons just stated.
> Transparent Soaps.—Genuine transparent soaps were originally prepared by shredding and drying any good soap and dissolving the shreds in alcohol. The usual mineral soap impurities being insoluble in alcohol settle out and the clear, purified alcoholic soap solution may be decanted or filtered off. Evaporation of the alcohol from this solution leaves a clear, solid, transparent and purified soap. Rarely, if ever, is this expensive, though ideal process, resorted to in modern soap making. Nowadays, other ways are employed to effect the transparency. Sugar solutions, gylcerol and sometimes castor oil are added for this purpose. The transparent soaps on the market to-day are frequently of very poor quality, and no longer is this property any guide or indication of purity, as formerly. Attention may be called to the fact that two of the transparent soaps in this list were shown to contain both sugar and glycerin. The latter ingredient is supposed to have valuable emollient properties and is desirable in some class of soaps. Sugar, on the other hand, serves no useful purpose in a toilet soap as far as the consumer goes, and should be regarded as an adulterant. Some specifications precisely prohibit it as an ingredient.
> Castile Soap.—This class of soap (otherwise known as Venetian or Marseilles soap) is prepared from olive oil, usually only the lowest grades being used for this purpose. Olive oil being one of the choicest and most expensive vegetable fats, is usually given credit for making the choicest and best grade of toilet soap. Castile soap usually sells for a comparatively high price, which is warranted providing that the soap sold as Castile is actually made from olive oil entirely and not from a mixture of a small proportion of olive oil with some much cheaper and less desirable fat. It is a very difficult process for the analyst to determine the exact nature of the original fat from which a given soap is made, but one who has been a user of Castile soap to any extent is not easily deceived by an inferior soap claimed to be such. The two Castile soaps listed in these tables are of high quality and good values.
> Milled Soap.—This is made by shaving the bars of any good, dry soap into fine chips and further drying until the moisture content of the chips is less than 10 per cent. The chips are then still further ground almost to a powder and perfumes and other desirable ingredients added. By this process very delicate perfumes may be added to the soap.

At Last Some Concrete Ideas on How to Advertise Canned Goods

Most of the Talk About Advertising Canned Goods Into Increased Consumption Has Been Mostly Generalties. The Writer of This Article Has Got Down to Brass Tacks.

Undoubtedly there is, and has been for many years, a strong and growing sentiment for advertising canned foods. This sentiment today is more real and insistent than it has ever been.

The local newspapers afford a splendid opportunity. All of you know the editor, and, after business hours, you could tell him some of the good things, the real things, that the canning industry is doing. Our trade papers, almost weekly, have articles which would be of inestimable interest and value to those local editors, who are no doubt as anxious for news as we are to read it. In my opinion we should educate the editor.

How much can be accomplished through the local grocers? Does the groceryman himself and his clerks know some of the things that he should know to sell your canned foods? Are canned foods in your town displayed on the shelves or in the cellar? How easy it would be to take a little of your time and his after hours and tell him some things which would make it easy for him to sell canned foods. We can sell that which we know.

Undoubtedly the most influential class of people in the country are the doctors. They come into intimate association with our home, our family life, and what the doctor thinks, goes. Does the doctor know what canned foods are? Have you taken the time, out of his office hours, to tell him some of the true things of canned foods? How interested he would be, because it vitally concerns his life vocation. Cure the doctor.

Strength and Economy Are Emphasized in the Overland Delivery Car

Overland Delivery Cars have the stamina necessary to carry their full loads trip after trip, day after day, month after month, without breakdowns or excessive wear.

In proportions and in material every part shows a strength uncalled for under ordinary conditions.

The very appearance of the cars is solid and substantial.

Yet Overland Delivery Cars are most economical to operate.

Time and time again they have demonstrated that they have run in continuous service at a cost of only one cent a mile for gasoline and oil.

Under ordinary conditions the Overland will replace three or even four horses. In extreme weather the car's advantage is even greater.

Our dealer in your city will be glad to demonstrate these Overland advantages and tell you of many others. See him to-day.

We also supply the Overland Model 75 Screened Side Delivery Car for $595, f. o. b. Toledo.

"A little knowledge is a dangerous thing." This teacher may not influence my daughter, but there are many other daughters who are going to be the consumers of foods in the next generation. Let us get this coming generation even though we may not have had this one. Teach the teacher.

What could be accomplished by reaching, in like manner, the Hotel Men's Associations, which meet in every State several times a year. Would not the chefs and stewards be interested in a subject so close to their own livelihood?

The National Canners' Association could also, in my opinion, accomplish much through educating the grocerymen's clerks. A difficult job, I will admit, because it is a large one, but something could be done along that line, and I dare say there is not a jobber or large retailer of canned foods in the country that would not gladly welcome a representative of the National Canners' Association to tell their salesmen how to sell their goods. What a virgin field for education is afforded by the stewards of the dining car service. This intelligent class could readily be reached through the railroads if proper methods were employed. We might, after a time, take a chance even on some of the waiters. Surely the railroads are interested, or should be interested, in a greater consumption of canned foods. Something like 13,000 people eat every day in the dining cars and restaurants of the Pennsylvania system. One road, not the Pennsylvania, serves imported peas on trains passing through one of our great pea packing States.

I leave to your imagination the possibilities of moving pictures telling the story of canned foods to the consumers. First of all, the people believe what they see—next, what they see at the movies. All these channels carry publicity possibilities for the National Canners' Association.

What of a department of the National Canners' Association laboratories investigating the best methods of preparing canned foods for the table? Is the French chef mistaken because he heats the cans before opening them? If he is right, say so on the label to the American housewives, your daily customers.

More opportunities are afforded in the advertising line by the labels. The label is the billboard, just as the contents of every can a food show. I consider the advertising space largely going to waste—every label affords greater advertising possibilities than have ever been used. As an amateur, I believe that standards should be established. I believe it can be done for all articles of food going into tin cans. Standards should be flexible as based on the rule of "reason," recognizing variations of nature and the individuality of the packer. When such standards shall have been established then is the opportunity to improve our labels. The label is the window of the can—open the blinds, raise the shades and clear the glass. Let the outsiders who want to buy canned foods have a look. Let in the light. You have grasped an opportunity if your labels carry recipes—otherwise do you not ask that familiar conundrum "Now that you've got it, what are you going to do with it?"

The foundation of advertising is honesty. We must have right goods, properly manufactured, and the label must tell the true story right. Make it easy, make it simple for the hundred million people who do not know canned foods as we do. Make it just as easy as you possibly can for her and him to know how to buy the output of our industry. Your potential market is one hundred million consumers three times a day.

What to Do With Small and Unprofitable Customers

A Subscriber Asks How to Make Them Profitable or Get Rid of Them. This Paper's Advice is Never to Get Rid of Them, but to Change Them Into an Asset if it is Possible.

Here is a problem that strikes a responsive chord in the breast of every reader of this paper, bar none:—

Albany, N. Y., March 23, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—How would you handle customers who give you only a small portion of their business, who only order such articles as bread, pie or milk, to the amount of about $1 a week? These require telephone service, keeping account, delivery and collection, which we cater to at a loss, having a meat department.

We have some such customers who give us the same sort of trade in meats, ordering, for example, a half pound of salt pork, a half pound of bacon, a quarter pound of smoked beef. What would be your method of appealing to this sort of customers for more business, or how to discontinue their trade in some agreeable manner? Hoping I may receive an early answer, I am,

Yours truly,
W. F. GRAF.

Every retailer is occasionally exasperated by the woman who comes to him only to buy his drives, or who buys half a pound of something at a time, and everybody wishes at one time or another that such people would stay away.

But no real merchant ever does anything to drive them away. No real merchant lets them see that he is irritated by the smallness of their business.

The department stores are credited with knowing more about the science of merchandising than anybody else; they have reduced it to almost an exact science. Nobody ever heard of a department store trying to get rid of a customer because his or her business was unprofitable. On the contrary they will work hard to maintain the connection—to keep the account on their books.

It is believed to be a fact that on the books of every large department store there are hundreds of customers who are literally a burden to the store; the store would be better off without them. In spite of this, there is always the hope that some day the customer can be turned into a profit.

No matter how unprofitable or how annoying a customer's business is, we would never deliberately throw it away, at least not until we had exhausted every means of getting more business out of him or her, and until we had absolutely demonstrated that the customer would never be anything but a nuisance.

When a customer who is buying the groceries for a family, at an expense of several dollars per week, buys only bread, or half a pound of beef, of you, and all the other goods somewhere else, there is a reason for it. She must think that ticular thing she buys of y ter than at other stores, o it differently, she must th your regular line is not so the other store's, or th : yo are higher. In a word, she ly does not consider your desirable as the other store lines. The thing to do is t why she thinks that, and re feeling if possible. Ask h things never come from cl customer always has a re acting as she does and she to object to telling you w When you have it, the thin to prove to the customer t no existence.

It seems to us that if we customers like that, we sho a special little campaign t them into an asset instead bility. The best kind of a would be one of salesmans store. When Mrs. Smith for her loaf of bread, or so thing that yields no profit sense dares you and your sell her something else. dare. Keep after her—not fensive way—until you h her something else. The question but that such a would eventually succeed, erly undertaken.

WITH THE EDITOR

Several months ago I published on this page some matter about a plan that department stores of Cleveland, Ohio, were working to induce consumers to be less exacting in their demands for service. Advertisements arguing with consumers were published in the Cleveland daily newspapers, and I reproduced one of them at the time. The retailers of Columbus, Ohio, have now taken up the plan, not only the department stores, but in other lines. They too are advertising in their daily papers, and are at present concentrating their attention on stopping the sending of goods on approval. One of the advertisements is herewith reproduced:—

Giving Consumers Is Easier Than Taking Back.

YOU SAVE WHEN WE SAVE—

The practice of sending articles on approval is expensive and unfair to all concerned.

Why should merchandise be taken out of stock for several days—or even several hours?

Why should actual customers be deprived of the opportunity of choosing from complete assortments—perhaps wanting precisely what is out of stock—temporarily.

Be fair to others, and they will be fair to you. Apply the Golden Rule—don't ask for approvals.

This was signed by the retailers affiliated with the plan. I am amused, and interested, but not impressed. It reminds me of the Arabian Nights story of the man who opened the bottle and let out a genii that once he was out, would not go back. The retail trade, meaning most lines outside of grocers, have opened the bottle, and the selfishness, greed and laziness of consumers has poured out in such volume that it cannot be put back.

"The practice of sending articles on approval is expensive and unfair to all concerned." Right, but who started it? The consumer didn't, you did, and you will find it easier to start than to stop.

"Why should merchandise be taken out of stock for several days, or even several hours?" Because you offered to take it out and for years you have led your customers to expect it.

"Why should actual customers be deprived of the opportunity of choosing from complete assortments—perhaps wanting precisely what is out of stock—temporarily?" That is up to you. Ask yourself, not your customers. They aren't interested in your problems.

"Be fair to others and they will be fair to you. Apply the Golden Rule—Don't ask for approvals." We will ask for them, say consumers, as long, Mr. Retailer, as you will grant them.

In short, it all comes to this: Better not start with consumers, anything in the way of concessions which you don't feel satisfied to continue indefinitely. It is easier to give to consumers than to take back.

From time to time this paper has discussed in the Legal Department and elsewhere the need of having it in writing when somebody guarantees to pay the debt of another. A customer occasionally appears whose credit is not good. He says that so-and-so will vouch for him, whereupon so-and-so is often called on the telephone or seen, and gives his verbal promise to be responsible for the customer's debt. Such promises must always be in writing to be worth anything; verbal promises are good for nothing.

Take This Precaution Whenever You Can.

Even where you have a promise properly in writing, complicated questions are apt to arise, such as whether you can sue the guarantor before you sue the debtor, or whether you can go against the guarantor only after you have squeezed the debtor and gotten nothing. To eliminate all these questions, the National Credit Men's Association is suggesting a form to be signed by anybody who is agreeing to stand good for the debt of another. The association says that this form has been approved by three attorneys and I take the liberty of making the fourth. If a guarantor will sign this form, you can sue him direct when the debt is due whether the debtor pays it or not:—

Please sell and deliver to.....
on your usual credit terms, such goods, wares and merchandise as ..... from time to time may select, and in consideration thereof I hereby guaranty and hold myself personally responsible for the payment at maturity of the purchase price of all such goods, wares and merchandise so sold and delivered, whether evidenced by open account or not. I hereby waive notice of acceptance hereof, amount of sales, dates of shipment or delivery, and notice of default in payment, and I further waive the requirement of legal proceedings being had against the said purchaser before demand is made and enforced against me.

This is intended to be a continuing guaranty, applying to all sales made by you to..... from this date until the same is revoked by me in writing.

Witness my hand and seal this .....day of.....19...

Of course there is no real excuse for the five grocers who when asked for Cream of Wheat gave their customers without notice some other package brand or plain middlings. Common merchandising sense would seem to constrain a merchant who hopes to sell his customer again, to give what was called for or explain why he did not. Nobody with a spoonful of brains practices the above form of substitution nowadays.

The Latest Cream of Wheat Attack on Retailers.

But while there is no there is a reason. In fact t two reasons why some retai filling orders for Cream of with middlings, and why ot substituting other goods whenever they can. The f son is the disclosure made recent trial of the Great Tea Co. vs. Cream of Wh that Cream of Wheat was but middlings and that the never been anything else to i a cleverly exploited name second reason is that the Cr Wheat Co. has never play with retailers. It puts such on its middlings that even tailer gets the full rate of a per carton he makes little o ing. Naturally it is not strai retailers try to escape wh they can. What the Cre Wheat Co. ought to do is to its own price to the jobber membering that its product i ing but middlings, the p charges for it is outrageou account of its enormous prof corporation is one of the we in its class in the United Sta

It is a pit these Los Angeles grocers fai realize that there is a legi way to substitute as well as a gitimate way.

One of the best little sermo have seen on the value of in and alertnes retail clerks from the pe E. L. Smyser is in part as follows:—

Being, Rather Than Seeming Interested In Customers.

CARELESSNESS IN NOTICING CUSTOM

A railroad is said to have pai a lawyer $7,000 for a sign to be at at their grade crossings. You h seen it lots of times: "Railro Crossing—Stop, Look, Listen." Fe words, at $1,400 per word!

Opinions Wanted

For several years this paper has been conducting a weekly Legal Department in which have appeared discussions of the legal problems of the mercantile business. Subscribers have also been given the fullest latitude to ask for opinions on their individual legal problems, and those queries have invariably been answered, fully, carefully and as intelligently as possible, often by a personal letter.

Has this service been appreciated? Has it been of real service? If it has, will somebody who has been helped by it write me a letter and say so?

THE EDITOR.

o get people to PAY ATTEN-ON!

low about you—do you pay at-ion, keep alert, in noticing cus-ers?

wo ways of acting when cus-ers are around: One is an in-erent attitude, an "Oh-I-don't-t-to-be-bothered" air, a "What-gs-YOU-here" manner, calcu-d to make a customer keep mov-as though a policeman had ned her to get off the grass. hat's no way to do—such im-iteness, such inattention, are kens that will come home to st, in the form of poor books a low total of sales.

he other way is to PAY AT-NTION when customers are it. Be alert—show customers you are aware that they are e, and that your greatest pleas-at the moment is in waiting them. That manifestation of onal interest, tactfully done, is trong asset for a salesperson; this is apt to be well done when really are interested—as should he case in every sale you make. on't be disdainful of what at may seem to be a little sale—the part of good salesmanship make it a larger sale. Don't be disdainful, even if it proves a little sale—if you have made od impression on the customer, of itself counts for something; she will be more than likely to you up next time, and your l sales will be the larger.

on't be guilty of carelessness in cing customers—the whole ob-and purpose of the store—of store—is to get customers! Let et them and keep them by pleas-them and win their trade by de-ing to do so!

I believe the main reason why so many clerks appear uninterested in waiting on customers is because they are uninterested, and haven't the ability—perhaps not the desire—to conceal it. Therefore the problem goes further back than merely making a clerk seem interested; it goes all the way back to making him be interested. How can that be done? Frankly, there isn't anything very exciting in filling an order for ten pounds of sugar, and after a clerk has done it a few thousand times, he can hardly be blamed for seeing nothing particular in it. Some clerks are able to feel interested in the personality of the customer; that solves the problem perfectly. Other clerks are made to feel an interest in the sale by being given a bonus on it, as is the custom of some employers. It is an interesting question, for I verily believe that the success of a store is more bound up with the alertness of the clerks than with anything else.

Cream of Wheat Co. Starts Campaign Against Substitutes

Sues Five Retailers Who When Asked for Cream of Wheat Gave Customers Other Package Goods or Plain Middlings.

News from California is that the Cream of Wheat Co., not satisfied with cutting off the Great Atlantic and Pacific Co. from its direct buying list, has begun lawsuits against another chain-store concern and four other retailers, all of Los Angeles, whom it accuses of selling other goods as Cream of Wheat.

Four detectives, consisting of a girl of 15, a woman and two men, were employed by the Cream of Wheat Co., and they have made repeated visits at all of the stores against whom the complaints are issued. The Chaffee Company was the chain-store concern referred to, and all of its seventeen stores were visited. Marjorie Rice, the 15 year-old girl detective, first went into the Chaffee store at 4308 Pasadena avenue. She asked for a package of Cream of Wheat, and alleged that she was given a wrapped carton about the size of a Cream of Wheat package, and was charged 14 cents for it. After leaving the store the package was opened and it proved to be Primrose Wheat made by a local mill.

She then went to the Chaffee store at 2634 North Broadway and asked for two pounds of Cream of Wheat, and was given two pounds of bulk middlings in a paper bag for which she was charged 10 cents. This store gave her a sales slip and the product was marked "Farina."

The Chaffee store at Lamanda Park was visited and she asked for a package of Cream of Wheat. Here she was given a wrapped package but was charged 21 cents. On taking off the wrapper it proved to be a carton of Germea.

At the other Chaffee stores in each instance she was sold bulk middlings under the name of Cream of Wheat, although the sales slip in each instance read "Farina." The other detectives claim that they have had practically the same experiences in the various Chaffee stores; that in each instance where they called for Cream of Wheat they were given something else without explanation.

At a store kept by a grocer named Royston, the girl detective asserts that she asked for Cream of Wheat. The clerk said, "Do you want the bulk?" and she replied, "Yes." She purchased one pound at 5 cents, and received a sales slip reading "Cream of Wheat 5 cents."

Various purchases of middlings are alleged to have been made from Marcus J. Firsich, 3111 South Vermont avenue. A sales slip reading "5 pounds Cream of Wheat at 5 cents, 25 cents," and a circular advertising Cream of Wheat at 5 pounds for 25 cents are offered as evidence against him.

At the store of Ernest Gerlemann, one of the men detectives states that Gerlemann personally waited on him, and as he was sacking the alleged middlings, he is claimed to have remarked, "We are headquarters for Cream of Wheat. We get it daily from the Globe Mills. We pay 5 cents a pound for it and sell it at 5 cents. We find it is the best sale we have ever had in our store, and expect to continue to push it as long as we are in business." Gerlemann's sales slip is alleged to have read "Cream of Wheat" and a Gerlemann's advertisement in the Los Angeles "Record" is produced which reads "5 pounds of Creamed Wheat 25 cents."

The charge against J. E. McDavid, 2634 W. Pico street, is practically the same as that against Firsich.

With this evidence in its possession, the Cream of Wheat Co. began suits against all the above concerns. It asked injunctions against all the defendants, and willl doubtless get them, if it has not already done so by the time these words are printed. The company claims heavy damages.

The Weights and Measures Bulletin of New York State has issued a new pamphlet during the week containing the following recommendation which it is hoped will have some influence with consumers:—

FALSE ADVERTISEMENTS.

Certain legislation has been passed making untrue and misleading advertisements unlawful. These laws can stop some of the worst abuses, but the surest check to this evil lies with the purchasing public.

Beware of any advertised article for which clearly excessive claims are made. Do not be led astray by price comparisons, such as "Worth $5, our price $1.98." It is not worth the higher price, as is proved by the very fact that it is sold for lower.

It is a mistake to look for price only; quality and quantity must also be considered.

The New York Department has made an extremely favorable impression upon the retail trade of the State by reason of its evident desire to be fair, and not to inspire in consumer's mind any unjust suspicions against the retailer. For example, in the new bulletin is found the following, speaking of short weights:

It is not fair to your merchant to suspect him and to say nothing about it. Give him a chance to explain. The honest merchant welcomes honest criticism.

It at last appears to be true that the long-talked-of contract for six hundred million pound cans of beef stew for delivery to the British Government within one year is a fact. The business is said to have been first placed by a Canadian concern, and to have been distributed among the Colonial Conserve Co. of Philadelphia, the J. T. Polk Co. of Indianapolis, and Burnham & Morrill, Portland, Me. The contract is said to involve $91,000,000 and to represent one of the largest single contracts for food products given as the result of the present war. A leading factor in the contract is said to be B. R. Kenworthy, a well-known trade factor in Philadelphia. It is possible that some other American firms will get a share.

During the week John J. Dillon, State Commissioner of Foods and Markets, gave out a statement making startling charges against poultry dealers of this city, particularly wholesalers. Mr. Dillon says that New York consumers have been defrauded out of $7,000,000 a year by buying poultry which had been weighted with sand an just before it was killed. M says that the stuffing of about to be killed with fore stances intended only to ad weight has been reduced t ence by the people that are In one case, Mr. Dillon sai weighing two pounds ten was found to contain eight of sand and gravel.

Effect of Outside Display.—The Town Council is about to put into effect a new law.

Everything is to be clear of the city building line—signs, stoops, show cases, post clocks and grocers' display. The writer appeared before the Council in the interest of his firm. He showed that the withdrawal of such show in the spring, summer and early fall months would prove a handicap to the business, that it would mean 25 per cent. more store space, which was impracticable. Proved that immediate sales would drop 50 per cent. in this department, described the pleasing, live effect that outside trims have, giving a brighter business tone and a wholesome complexion to the street.

We may win out.

You will remember that last Saturday, the 25th, was a charming day. We put a show outside—the first since late last fall, and the receipts in this department traceable directly to the layout showed an increase of 40 per cent. sales over any other Saturday during the entire season.

If such display is permitted in your town, by all means take advantage of it. People may talk and argue all they want for and against out-door shows, but it brings the business just the same. Certain people will stop and certain people will buy on the outside who would not have bought at your place if the stuff hadn't been there.

If it's only potatoes you show up, it's a mighty advertising opportunity. Think of five, eight or ten thousand people a day seeing your potatoes and reading your price by the sack, the bushel, the peck! Do you know of a cheaper or more effective ad.?

You say, "What's the matter window?"

Nothing.

Only people like to handle they become more real to them.

Haven't you observed men grapefruit, how they "weigh" t pinch them and stroke them so and tenderly, and then what l Why, they're got to have the the same with oranges and lem apples, and by the same token same with potatoes. Keep thes away from folks or fix them as you'd think they "grew ther they'll let them grow. It would a pity, you know, to spoil yo works.

The Profit in the WRIGLEY Package

Fish.

sirable sizes of mackerel are st out of the market. Norways lown to hard pan and are y worth quoting any longer. s are exceedingly high and rs are only taking stock when have to. Some shore mackerel bout, but are not very active. ish is reported to be almost out of the market. On account of the scarcity, the market is about 2 cents above normal. Pink and Chum Alaska salmon are still showing an upward tendency on account of scarcity and good demand. Prices on Pinks advanced a shade further during the week. The high grades of salmon show no particular change. Domestic sardines, speaking particularly of quarter oils, are almost out of the market; such scarcity has not existed for years. Imported sardines are still in very light stocks and are ruling at very high prices.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged on the same basis ruling for several weeks. Future tomatoes are, if anything, slightly easier. Corn and peas show no change for the week. Apples unchanged and dull. California canned goods are in light request at ruling prices. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged, with the exception of spinach, which has advanced about 10 cents from the lowest point.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are still unsettled with a somewhat weaker tendency. Peaches, if anything, are a shade easier than they have been, though nobody could understand how they could go any lower than the prices ruling for several months. Apricots unchanged and quiet. Raisins and currants are unchanged, still being firm; fair demand.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, after a decline, have advanced again, and at present are quoted f. o. b. and in a large way $3.90 per bushel. Demand is fair. Marrows are unchanged for the week. Fair demand. California limas have advanced again and are now quoted at about 35 points above the lowest. Green and Scotch peas, particularly green, are almost out of the market, and there will be no more until October.

Butter.

The butter market is very active and all grades are showing a phenomenally good demand considering the high prices. The make is very light and in this section storage butter is cleaned up, therefore a continued high market can be looked for until the make begins to increase.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady and unchanged with a good consumptive demand. The quality is now the best of the year and the market is in good shape and is not likely to show any radical change soon.

Cheese.

There is a steady normal consumptive demand for cheese and with light stocks. Under grades are particularly scarce and are selling close to the price of the best. No immediate change seems likely until after the new make begins in June.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are steady and unchanged with a light consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are in light consumptive demand and steady at an advance for the week of ¼ to ½ cent. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are all steady and unchanged.

The Quality Index

A STORE that sells high-grade merchandise fairly radiates an atmosphere of quality.

The real quality index is the confidence of the customers of the store. That confidence is born of the effort of the owner himself—an effort and intent to sell only goods that will give entire satisfaction to every customer every time.

The grocer who sells the products of National Biscuit Company secures for his store the buyer's confidence in his goods that could be had in no other way.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Both salted herrings and imported mackerel, particularly Norways, continue in very active demand and prices, particularly for Norway mackerel, show a slight advance over last week's asking prices. Besides, stocks are much depleted of mackerel, and it seems that by the end of Lent practically all the stocks of Norway mackerel will have gone into consumption. Norway reports one of the largest catches of spring herrings in its history. In spite of the enormous catch, prices are even higher than they were before, because all kinds of fresh fish are bought by German agents all over Norway, but the Germans are paying just as high prices for the salted herrings in barrels. At the time when our Norwegian correspondents wrote to us the price of fresh spring herrings was about kr. 30, while in ordinary years the price for the very same goods used to be no more than about kr. 3 to 4. Consequently those

How About Vacation Time and Camp Life

This is the time of year when mountains, seashore and camp are loudly calling. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk forms a part of the equipment of every family who spend annually these few months seeking rest and contentment near to nature. See to it that you call your customer's attention to the convenience, cleanliness and safeness of Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk during the hot weather. It can be used for every purpose where ordinary raw milk is used. It is a big relief to feel sure of your milk supply when in camp or on vacation. Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk being made from the highest grade raw material, by careful and sanitary methods of manufacture, offers to your customer a safe and wholesome, absolutely pure milk supply.

Do not take any chances with baby's milk supply when in camp or on vacation

Impress upon your customers the necessity of providing a safe and sterile food for baby during the hot months, or when away from home, or in temporary, changed or strange surroundings. Many times this is the direct cause of baby's digestion being upset, and an anticipated pleasant and restful vacation is thereby turned into an anxious and unpleasant one. Eagle Brand Condensed Milk affords at all times and under any circumstances a pleasing and safe food for baby. More babies have been reared successfully upon Eagle Brand Condensed Milk than upon all other infant foods combined.

Another Writer Who Thinks There Are Too Many Retail Stores

Says Excessive Competition Creates Trade Evils and Forces Up Prices. Consumers Want Too Much.

A writer in the last issue of "Collier's Weekly," under the title "The Extravagant Corner Grocery," presents an interesting study of the average grocer of to-day, and some of the problems that he is constantly facing. A part of it is as follows:—

If the middleman is blamable—and unquestionably he is—then the retailer cannot hope to escape guiltless. In his defense he urges certain reasons why he is forced to charge more than formerly. Pure food legislation has added to the cost of groceries; so has the demand for package goods instead of goods in bulk. Sanitary regulations are much stricter than formerly, and add to the cost.

But the big reason for the high cost of retail food distribution, and one the retailer never mentions, is competition, that old fetish of the economist of the Adam Smith school. Competition in the grocery business doesn't operate to reduce prices; it increases them. It is true there is no longer any vigorous competition in the cutting of prices; even the smallest cities have their grocers' associations, which sees to it that prices vary but little between the various stores. But there is a decidedly vigorous competition for business in spite of that, and it is from this competition that most waste arises. Each store tries to give best service; hence there must be deliveries by each different firm, instead of a general delivery by all, covering the city once, instead of many times. Frequently as many as twenty different firms will make deliveries in one block. Competition results also in a multiplicity of deliveries; if trade is to be retained, even a box of matches must be delivered at once.

Credit is not due solely to competition, but competition often results in the extension of credit to doubtful customers, and hence competition is to blame for a large proportion of the loss arising from bad credits.

Retailers excuse their big profits on fresh vegetables and meats by calling attention to the perishable nature of these products. But here again competition is largely to blame. Each little store, in order to satisfy customers, must carry a complete line of all fresh vegetables and meats, and often, due to restricted demand and the small number served, certain lines are not called for, while more often still there is loss because of the poor cold storage facilities in many small retail establishments.

Each little grocer must pay rent, interest, insurance, taxes, profit. Possibly these are the greatest wastes of competition. In every city and hamlet the grocery business is overdone, in spite of continual failures, and the public is compelled to pay, in high prices, for all this surfeit of establishments.

Since almost half the retail cost of food products goes to middlemen and retailers, it might be thought the men engaged in those lines are making exorbitant profits. That is probably true of some of them. For instance, figures show that "chain stores," which buy much of their goods at wholesale and make many economies in retail distribution, need add only about 20 per cent. to the first cost to cover all expenses, as against the 30 to 45 per cent. that must be added by the small retailer who buys from jobbers and wholesalers. It can be seen there is great opportunity for big profits in our present distribution system, and some men, of course, have seized these opportunities. But they retain practically all the profits for themselves, passing but little on to the consumer in cheaper prices.

But while some men make big money under the present system, the majority do not. The owner of the average corner grocery usually makes only a bare living, though he works long hours and drafts his whole family into the store. No business shows a larger percentage of failures than the grocery business. "No particular class of dealers," the New York Commission report concludes, "is making undue profit, and the smaller tailers are barely making wages

This is all very fair and very Regular readers of this pape not find much that is new in i the same thoughts and opi have many times been expres the "Modern Merchant and Gr World." An excessive numb retail grocery stores, and exc demands from consumers, ar sponsible for both the high selling prices and the evils o trade.

Human Skunks.

The world is full of human skunks, ain't it?

Me, I'd rather do business with some of the real ones than with the human ones.

You can depend on 'em better. You know what you've got to expect of 'em, and you can wear a rain coat. With the human kind you never know what to expect. They get you just when you've left your rain coat at home.

There's a little place I make once in a while with two good stores in it. I believe there's a couple more or so, but they're little places that sell candy and note paper too and don't count for much. The other two are real stores.

About six months ago one of 'em thought he'd make a hit and he started in to have special days, when he'd cut prices. Naturally he picked out goods that everybody knew about, like Postum Cereal and things like that. The other fellow saw himself losing some business and he got into the game too. To make a long story short, in a little while both of 'em were selling about a dozen things at prices that didn't even give 'em back a new dollar for an old one.

When they reached that, the fellow that had started the ball rolling woke up to what a fool he'd been.

It's funny it's so easy to see what a fool you've been, and so blamed hard to see what a fool you're going to be. Ain't that right?

In spite of that fool break, he had a little gumption, so he went to the other one and laid down.

"I was a jackass ever to start the thing," he said. "I own up to it. And I've learned my lesson—I'll never do it again."

Then he proposed the scheme that they both go back to the old prices on everything. It was a good scheme, for between 'em they did most all the trade and if the people couldn't get the stuff under price from either of 'em they would pay the regular price to both of 'em.

The second man jumped at it, of course. He'd only gone in anyway because he had to and he was tickled to death to get out. So they fixed it up that on a certain day they'd both put the prices back to where they were before. I believe there was about fifteen things.

When the time came they both did it. Pretty soon, though, the second man began to get wise to the fact that he wasn't selling much of these fifteen things. He couldn't figure out why, unless somebody else was selling 'em cheaper, and after sitting still for a week or two he got an outside boy and sent him to the other store to buy some stuff. Some of the fifteen brands was among it.

Every one of 'em was sold at the cut price. The blamed Slink hadn't gone up on 'em at all. He'd simply played the other man into putting up his prices.

Well when he found that out he went straight to Slink and put it at him. He had the goods and Slink couldn't work out.

"Well to tell the truth," he said, "I got to thinking about that after I'd seen you and I was afraid to go ahead because I think an agreement like that is against the law. I was afraid we'd get into trouble."

"Didn't occur to you to tell me that, did it?" said the second man. "You left me thinking all the time you were going to go through with it—it was your scheme, you remember—and then you dumped me! You're an infernal skunk, that's what you are!"

Good words! Maybe not quite strong enough.

Now I ain't a lawyer, but it does seem to me as if that scheme to fix the prices may have got up against the law. But that didn't make any difference. It was up to the fellow that had got it up, wasn't it, to let the other man know if he'd decided to back out. There ain't any two ways about that, is there? And I wouldn't believe him on his oath—neither would the other man—if he said he didn't cook the whole thing up. I'll bet anything he did cook it up and it was a dirty business all the way through.

It was dirty because it second man hung up by his He can't show Slink up Slink would look like the f the people, trying to keep down, and the other man wo like just the opposite. D that? And he couldn't go o to get decent prices for the because Slink wouldn't let h was high and dry—he cou anything.

Nothing anyway except o on the street, but there a money in that, is there?

I wish there was some could complain to the B Health about a stinker like have him quarantined or so Anyway, I'm going to see gets a copy of this paper, if get it anyway. That may he

No. 357.—Some More Results of Not Putting Everything in the Contract.

I take it that every reader of these articles either advertises in some kind of a publication, or is interested in advertising and expects to do some sometime. Therefore I expect general interest for the following:—

Cleveland, Ohio.

We are expecting to be sued shortly by a certain paper who claims we owe money to it on account of an advertising contract, and meanwhile we should like to submit the question to you, knowing that you encounter all sorts of legal questions. If we are liable for the claim, we had better pay it and be done with it, rather than pay heavy court charges and lawyers' fees. On the other hand, if we are not liable for it, we would like to know it.

About six months ago we made a contract to advertise in a certain journal circulating among retail dealers. Most of our business is wholesale. The advertising solicitor said the paper was the most important of its class—he emphasized this and repeated it several times—and would positively bring us business. He said his subscribers would write us from all over the South, and that retailers everywhere swore by his paper and always patronized the firms advertising in it. The greatest stress, however, was laid on the promise that the advertising would positively bring us orders, and if it had not been for this we would have never thought of advertising, for we are not advertisers. The advertising ran for several months, when we stopped it. It did not bring us any business whatever, and we inquired and found that the paper did not have a large circulation and was not the most important of its class. We also found that it was not especially well regarded among the trade; in fact, its position is somewhat inferior. In short, every representation made by the solicitor was false. We do not feel that we are liable for the bill, which amounts to over $200. We have paid nothing on it. The paper threatens to enter suit for the above amount and to also hold us for the entire year. What is your advice?

Respectfully yours,
O., G. & Co.

I think this correspondent is not morally liable, but legally I am afraid he is. There are a number of cases in the books which hold that a paper can collect its advertising bills under just about these circumstances. I have found one case in which the facts were extremely similar. The solicitor had said that his paper had the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the territory, and almost guaranteed that an advertisement in it would bring in more money than the advertisement cost. The advertiser, he said on the strength of these statements, signed up and the advertisements were published. They never brought any business whatever, and later the advertiser learned that the paper in question did not have the largest circulation in its field.

Naturally he refused to pay the bill, because he felt that he had been cheated, as indeed, morally speaking, he had been. But the court said he must pay, anyway. The court said, as many other courts have done before it, that every seller is entitled to do a certain amount of "puffing" for his goods, as to the truth of which he will not be held strictly responsible; that this talk about the big circulation was nothing more than puffing; that as for the promise of business from the advertising, it was "hardly more than prophecy or the expression of an opinion." The court that decided this case also indulged in some reflections on the fact that this most important part of the contract had been omitted from the written document.

I recall another case, also based on an advertising contract, in which the advertiser resisted payment because the solicitor had said that the advertiser's goods would be "introduced" into so many stores by the advertising. The advertiser claimed that they were not introduced in any stores to speak of, but the court said "pay your bill just the same." Not only was this "guarantee" omitted from the written contract, but the court said it was really not a guarantee at all. It is profitable to reflect that if the advertiser had thought to insist that the "guarantee" go in the written contract, he would then have had a good legal reason for not paying his bill if the guarantee was not fulfilled.

I hate to be saying "I told you so" so often, but this Cleveland case is simply another case of reaping what one has sown. When this advertising solicitor was reeling off his promises and representations about his paper and what it would do, this correspondent should have said, "Put all that in the contract. Write 'I hereby warrant and declare,' and under that put 'that this paper is the most important of its class and has a circulation of so much; that an advertisement in its pages will positively bring orders for goods amounting to so much money.'" And anything else that the solicitor felt like putting in. In other words, everything he said about what his paper was or what the advertising would do, should have been made a part of the written contract. Talk is cheap and the courts always hold it cheap.

If the paper signs or accepts a contract like that—don't let any solicitor accept it; get the manager of the paper to do it—and if it is later learned that the paper wasn't what it was claimed to be, or if no business resulted, then an advertiser would have solid ground under his feet. But it is highly probable that no paper would accept any such contract, and an advertiser would thus know at the start where he stood and would save his money. I don't know a great deal about advertising, but I have a strong impression that few if any papers will guarantee that advertising in their pages will bring business, that is, guarantee it in writing. Certainly no reputable papers will.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed you will find the first issue of "Store News," a store paper which we intend publishing every two weeks, also other advertising we have done.

We would like your criticism and suggestions on this paper.

Thanking you most heartily, I am,
Yours truly,
H. A. DIMLICH.

The store paper enclosed was printed on good white paper and contained four pages 6 x 9 inches. I think once every two weeks hardly often enough to issue it. I should try to get it out every week, especially if it constitutes the bulk of your advertising. I am reproducing the first page and the fourth. The second page contained but one real advertisement of pickled Norway herring. The balance of the space was filled by more talk about "Let us do your marketing," and free auto delivery. Page 3, which I do not reproduce, contained a recipe for Halibut a la creme, and an announcement of the fish and oyster department. Page 4 really gets down to advertising. I have reproduced Page 1 about three-fourths the original size, but Page 4 much reduced.

I think this paper could be strengthened by having considerable of the matter now in it cut out. A full page has been given to "Let us do your marketing." The substance of it is, "you don't like to go to a store; phone your order to us, and we will deliver it quicker than other stores." I should have given an inch or two to this. Half a page more has been given to exploiting the telephone and auto delivery service. I should have covered that in the inch or two already assigned to the subject. Between one-third and one-half page has been given to Pickled Norway Herring. I should have said about the same thing—it is good—but put it in less space.

STORE NEWS

Vol. I Scranton, Pa., Friday March 10, 1916. No. 1

LET US DO YOUR MARKETING

You don't like to go to market, do you? That is, you don't like to go to the store with a market basket and jam a dollars worth of sugar, six bars of yellow soap and a peck of potatoes into it, and pack a sack of salt under your arm, while you hold your heavy basket and a dozen of eggs with the other hand and go marching up the street with your truck-load of goods. Of course you don't, and we don't blame you. We wouldn't do it ourselves. Nope not us, we're not made that way. We like to have the other fellow bring our crate of eggs and barrel of sugar around.

Now don't you like to have your groceries delivered to you? We believe you do, and we would like to do it, because we believe we can give you better groceries than any other store, and deliver them to you quicker.

The next time you want to go to market, just go to the telephone, if you haven't one, your neighbor will leave you use her's, and call 5624 J Bell Phone or 1073 New Phone and tell us what you want.

We'll tend to the rest. We will give your orders the most careful attention and select your groceries from our large stock of foods, from all parts of the world, which is always fresh, and then deliver the goods, free of charge, within an hour, if you say so.

The "favorite recipe" idea is good. I should make it local as largely as possible and give the name of the woman from whom I got it. There is not a woman but who has a favorite recipe and she will be glad to give it to you if you ask her. If the thing is worked up well, it is susceptible of a great deal of interest.

Page 4 is good advertising. The man who writes this is capable of producing fine stuff—he has the knack of expressing himself well.

As to the printing of this paper, I should tell my printer to fix it up so it will look more like a paper and less like a circular. It is well printed now, but can be made to look much more like a paper, which is what it is supposed to be.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

A Real Whole Wheat Toast

Lovers of real whole wheat toast will find palate satisfaction and real food value in the Shredded Whole Wheat Wafer. It is made the same as Shredded Wheat Biscuit except that it is compressed into a wafer and baked by electricity. Unlike many so-called whole wheat flour products, it has the whole wheat in it, including the bran-coat, which is so useful in stimulating bowel movement. You should always keep this crisp, snappy, delicious wafer in stock. It is delicious when eaten with butter, soft cheese or marmalades.

What Do You Think of This?

¶ We struck a grocer not long ago that wouldn't have anything but Wheatena on his own table, but wouldn't stock it because he thought he handled enough cereals!

¶ Could anything surpass the inconsistency of that? How many of his customers were as insistent about a cereal as he was about Wheatena?

¶ That really is typical of the way Wheatena gets and stays in. Packed and guaranteed quite differently from other cereals.

Trading Stamp Laws Must Pass the Constitution of Their Own States or They Will Be Bad

United States Supreme Court Decision Merely Decided That Florida and Oregon Constitutions Were Not Offended by Premium Tax Laws. Other State Constitutions Might Have Been Offended. National Wholesale Grocers' Association Bill.

We have received several inquiries as to the effect of the recent decision by the United States Supreme Court upon the legality of Florida and Oregon laws taxing all persons using trading stamps and gift schemes $6,000 per year. The United States Supreme Court decided that under their constitutions the States named had a right to pass these laws and the tax was therefore good.

There seems to be an impression among the trade that all that is necessary for any State to do now is to pass a similar law and it will be sure to be good under the Supreme Court decision. In fact the National Wholesale Grocers' Association has framed a model bill which it will circulate among the retail trade of the States, with a view to having it introduced in all the Legislatures. This act is as follows:—

Section 1. Every person, firm or corporation who shall use, and every person, firm or corporation who shall furnish to any person, firm or corporation to use in, with, or for the sale of any goods, wares or merchandise, any stamps, coupons, tickets, certificates, cards or other similar devices which shall entitle the purchaser of such goods, wares or merchandise to procure from any person, firm or corporation, any goods, wares or merchandise free of charge or for less than the retail market price thereof, upon the production of any number of said stamps, coupons, tickets, certificates, cards or other similar devices, shall before furnishing, selling or using the same, obtain a separate license from the ——— of each county wherein such furnishing or selling or using shall take place, for each and every store or place of business in that county, owned or conducted by such person, firm or corporation, from which such furnishing or selling, or in which such using shall take place.

An appplicant for such license shall pay to the County Treasurer of the county for which such license is sought the sum of $6,000. Receipt therefor shall thereupon be issued and upon presentation thereof to the ——— of the same county, he shall issue to the applicant a license to furnish or sell, or a license to use, for one year, the stamps, coupons, tickets, certificates, cards, or other similar devices herein mentioned. Such license shall contain the name of the grantee thereof, the date of its issue, the date of its expiration, the town or city in which and the location at which the same shall be used, and such license shall be used at no place other than that mentioned therein.

No person, firm or corporation shall furnish or sell to any other person, firm or corporation to use, in, with, or for the sale of any goods, wares or merchandise, any such stamps, coupons, tickets, certificates, cards or other similar devices for use in any county in this State, other than that in which such furnishing or selling shall take place.

Sec. 2. Every person, firm or corporation who shall offer or deliver with goods, wares or merchandise bargained and sold or to be sold, any premium or prize or any article of value in the nature of a premium or prize or who shall sell or give or offer to sell or give any goods or other article or articles of value in the nature of a bonus, prize or premium in consideration of the purchase of or agreement to purchase any goods, wares or merchandise, or who shall sell or offer to sell any article of value in the nature of a bonus, prize or premium in connection with the sale, or offer to sell, of any goods, wares or merchandise and as an inducement to purchase such goods, wares or merchandise shall before performing such acts, or any of them, obtain a separate license from the—— of each county in which such offering, selling or delivering shall take place.

An applicant for such license shall pay to the County Treasurer of the county for which such license is sought the sum of $6,000. A receipt therefor shall thereupon be issued and upon presentation thereof to the ——— of the same county, he shall issue to the applicant a license to offer or deliver or sell for one year, premiums, prizes or articles of value as inducements in connection with the purchase or sale of goods, wares or merchandise. Such license shall contain the name of the grantee thereof, the date of its issue, the date of its expiration and the name of the county in which such acts shall be authorized.

The fact is that the Supreme Court decision will have a much narrower effect than was at first believed. It merely decided that the States of Florida and Oregon did not violate their own constitutions when they passed laws taxing premium users $6,000. It does not follow that the same law might not violate the constitution of another State. Every trading stamp act passed by a State Legislature, in order to be good, must pass the test of the constitution of that State, and if it fails to do that, the Supreme Court decision will not help it in the least.

Welch Grape Juice Monopoly Suit Results in Mistrial.

The damage suit brought by Frey Brothers Co., wholesale grocers, of Baltimore, against the Welch Grape Juice Co., alleging a conspiracy to maintain resale prices, has resulted in a disagreement on the part of the jury. It was tried a few days ago, but must now be tried again unless Frey Bros. Co. withdraw from their position. The cause of the suit was that certain jobbers, competitors of Frey Bros. Co. in the sale of Welch's Grape Juice, complained to the Welch Co. that plaintiff was cutting prices. Defendant then satisfied itself that plaintiff was in fact doing so. Thereupon it refused to fill an order it then had from plaintiff and has never since sold it any grape juice. It is further in evidence that the plaintiff then notified the jobbers who had complained of plaintiff's price cutting that defendant had cut it off of the list of defendant's distributors, and would not thereafter sell it grape juice. There was further a circular letter of the defendant sent out to the trade in October, 1912, in which defendant stated it expected jobbers to maintain its resale prices, and that it would decline to sell to those who did not. Frey Bros. Co. had difficulty in getting grape juice and sued Welch & Co. on the charge of conspiracy to interfere with competition.

National Wholesale Grocers' Association Trying to Have Canned Goods Weights Stated in Metric Terms

Following Food Inspection Decision 163, Which Allows Net Weights to be Stated in Metric Terms, the Association Works Out Metric Equivalents for Practically All Canned Goods. Also Suggests What Are Safe Weights to Mark on Canned Goods Labels.

Readers hereof know that for years the National Wholesale Grocers Association has been working to get the metric system of weights and measures introduced into commercial transactions in this country, which of course includes the packing and distribution of groceries and all other commodities. The argument is that the metric system is used in most foreign countries, and in many Government transactions of our own country, also in several professions here such as the engineering professions. In the interest of uniformity, the National Association contends that instead of pounds and ounces for the grocery business, metric grams and kilograms should be used; that instead of feet and inches in other businesses metric equivalents should be used, and so on.

The committee of the National Association has made a decided step forward by getting the Federal Food and Drug Board to make Food Inspection Decision No. 163 as follows:—

> Provided that statments of quantity may be in terms of metric weight or measure. Statements of metric weight should be in terms of kilograms or grams. Statements of metric measure should be in terms of liters or centiliters. Other terms of metric weight or measure may be used if it appears that a definite trade custom exists for marking articles with such other terms and the articles are marked in accordance with the custom.

Following this up, the National Committee has worked out metric equivalents for the weight of practically every line of canned goods packed. A copy of these has been sent to this office, and with them comes a list of weights which the National Association thinks the various lines of canned goods ought to show. The weights suggested allow for reasonable variations in weight, and are purposely made scant, so that the actual weight of a well filled can will usually be more than the marked weight, thus making everybody safe in the sale.

The list of the suggested weights in pounds and ounces, with their metric equivalents, is as follows:

Here's the nationally advertised goods question from a little different angle:—

There's so much national advertising that consumers are beginning to feel that nationally advertised goods as a class are the best kind to buy.

That feeling can make money for you or it can take money from you, depending on the way it is used.

Price Discrimination.

Readers hereof will remember the provision of the new Clayton anti-trust act which prohibits discrimination in price where the intent is to destroy competition. In spite of many denials and explanations, numerous people still think this provision compels every seller to make the same price to everybody. This is not the case. William J. Harris, Federal Trade Commissioner, told the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association last Tuesday what this provision meant:

> Section 2 of the Clayton Act declares discrimination in price between different purchasers of commodities to be unlawful under certain conditions. This section is especially interesting to manufacturers. It does not mean that the same price must be made to all customers, but it does mean that a manufacturer or dealer shall not make low prices in the places where he has competition for the purpose of putting the competitor out of business. This kind of price cutting was one of the favorite clubs of certain trades and monopolies.

And, generally speaking, this is about all that Section 2 of the Clayton act does mean. Suppose the normal price of a product is 10 cents a pound. It is selling for 10 cents in Lancaster, Pa. A new company making this product goes into Lancaster and by salesmanship and enterprise gets a strong foothold, partly displacing the goods of an old company. The latter, though selling everywhere else at 10 cents, cuts the price in Lancaster to 6 cents, the object being of course to destroy its competitor. If these companies were doing an interstate business, and were thus subject to the Clayton act at all, the cut to 6 cents would be illegal. But a cut to 9 cents probably would not be, because that would go no further than proper competition.

Making a Salesman Out of Nothing.

I have always been inclined to believe that all the correspondence schools and the various other schemes for teaching salesmanship—there is a surprising number of these enterprises—were pretty nearly pure piffle. So far as they aim to take a salesman born but in the rough, and sandpaper off his rough edges, they are good. So far as they aim to take anybody and make a salesman of him, they are bad. It can't be done.

I have just finished reading some of the questions in one of a course of lessons on salesmanship, and here present them:—

> Questions and Answers Lesson No. 9.
> Q. Why should a salesmen stand while selling?
> A. It denotes attention; he can also command the situation.
> Q. What is the psychological reason a salesman standing commands best attention?
> A. Standing, he is a positive force; seated, a negative one.
> Q. Where does the master salesman focus his gaze while selling goods?
> A. Square in the eyes of his prospect, showing force and power.
> Q. How can a salesman carry a convincing air?
> A. By meeting his sales problems with his knowledge, plus ability?

This is the same clever, plausible patter that most these courses in salesmanship consist of. Following every rule here would no more make a salesman than a hat and a suit of clothes would make a statesman. The point is this: The born salesman could violate every one of these rules and still sell goods, while a man who is not cut out for a salesman couldn't sell goods even if he followed them all.

A Cruel Thief.

Excessive competition is probably responsible for as much human depravity as almost any other one factor in human economics. Under the stress of it, and in order to preserve themselves from destruction, men do things which are criminal and never seem to see it. Such men would not steal a dollar from you by putting their hands in your pocket and taking it, but they would steal two dollars from you by skimping that much on the value of merchandise they sell.

I am thinking of the scheme exposed by the New York State Commissioner of Weights and Measures. Here it is in his own words:

> There are 7,000 carloads of live poultry shipped to the city of New York from Western States annually, with approximately 5,000 fowls to a car, averaging four pounds each, totaling 140,000,000 pounds of poultry. The average wholesale price is 20 cents per pound, making a total of $28,000,000. This poultry retails at approximately 25 cents a pound, making a retail cost of $35,000,000 annually.
> The poultry is bought of the producers by dealers in the West. The producer is obliged to deliver the birds with empty crops. If the birds are delivered to the dealers with any food in their crops, 10 per cent. of the total weight is deducted for feed allowance.
> The custom of handling live poultry in transit is to physic the birds the first day in transit; the second day to feed light food without water, with a mixture of red pepper to irritate the stomach. For twenty-four hours before arriving at New York the birds are kept without food.
> The evil of the system is found in the twenty-four hour starvation followed by the giving of the watery mixture of sand, gravel, corn and wheat mixed with paste forming bran and "shorts." The latter cause the mass to stick to the walls of the crop and prevent its passage on into the stomach. As a consequence hunger remains unsatisfied and the fowl continues to eat until it can hold no more.
> In its investigation the Federal authorities found birds weighing two pounds ten ounces carrying a stuffed crop weighing eight ounces, or 20 per cent. of the weight of the bird. On a four-pound rooster the weight of the crop was 13½ ounces, or 21 per cent. of the weight of the bird. On this basis the people of the city of New York are buying 28,000,000 pounds of sand, gravel, meal, paste and water at 25 cents a pound, as chicken feed, at a total cost of $7,000,000.

What a wretch a man is to do a thing like this! Pass the cruelty to a living creature that it involves—I suppose the very mention of that would bring peals of laughter from the men who do such things. Consider it only from the standpoint of honesty. A man who robs consumers by a trick like this is a particularly mean thief, and he ought to be ridden on a rail.

The Metric Scheme.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association deserves credit for the indomitable perseverance with which it has for years waged its campaign to have our system of pounds and ounces, feet and inches, etc., give way to the foreign metric system of grams and kilograms, liters and centiliters, etc. The association's idea is that most other nations use the metric system, and if we did there would be virtual uniformity in commercial transactions throughout the world.

The association has obtained a ruling from the Government that in marking net weight on foo drugs metric terms can be and with this in its hand, it h the metric equivalent for the of all canned goods worked o is asking packers to put th their labels. A can of corn ing 1 pound, 4 ounces, inst being so labeled, would be "net weight 567 grams," if th ric system were employed.

I can see a chance for frau or perhaps I should say fo agreeable competition, whic make the National Asso sorry it got permission f packer to use metric terms all had to. Packers of all of goods very closely scan competitor's package to see weight he is giving, and th very loath to give less than body else is giving. That ke weight of a given product uniform among the differen ducers of it, and is a general tion to all.

But when some packer wh to skimp his goods ceases t 1 pound (which is equivale metric grams), and says 380 which is equivalent to abo ounces, what then? No co would know that 380 grams less than one pound; in she wouldn't know what it Isn't there room here for short-weighting?

Labels for Egg Substitute

"Egg powder," in the opinion Bureau of Chemistry of the U. partment of Agriculture, is syno with "powdered egg" and "Serv Regulatory Announcements No. the Bureau states that articles do not contain powdered egg or contain other ingredients will garded as misbranded within the ing of the Food and Drugs Act are labeled "egg powder" withou ification. The Bureau also hol an article should not be labele substitute" unless it possesses th erties of eggs. These question manufacturer must settle for l before shipping his product in state commerce. The Bureau of istry is without authority, it is s conduct experiments to determi individual manufacturers whether products will accomplish the claimed for them, and the manuf ers must do this work themselves.

Free Flour Storage in Philadelphia Limited to Two Days.

By a decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission the railroads entering Philadelphia need not give more than two days' free storage in Philadelphia. The commission ruled that the roads' rule limiting storage to two days free of charge was justified and not discriminatory against Philadelphia. The fight against a limit of two days' free storage time began in November, 1914, immediately after the carriers amended their rules by changing the free time from four to two days. In its decision the Interstate Commerce Commission held that storage regulations are intended primarily to prevent congestion of carriers' terminal facilities, and that public interests require that freight should be removed promptly from the carriers' terminals.

The New York Letter

Sperry & Hutchinson Co. Appeal to Women in Trading Stamp License Fight. New Baking Powder Bill Passes. How Cream of Wheat Co. is Tying Up Its Product. Indictments Expected in Poultry Frauds. Rochester Merchants and Manufacturers Will Vote on Stevens Bill. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, April 7, 1916.

Concerning the recent decision by the United States Supreme Court upholding the right of Florida and Oregon to tax users of premiums $6,000 a year, the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. has issued the following appeal "to the women of America":

> The Supreme Court of the United States has just handed down a decision, which makes the future of the woman's aid and home builder—the trading stamp—rest with the people. If the women of this country want the system of premium giving preserved for them, it is up to them to say so.
> There are in this country certain interests which are opposed to the trading stamp and coupon, certain interests which are selfish enough to say to the millions who have beautified their homes through the use of trading stamps that they no longer shall benefit. They have completely ignored the wishes of 10,000,000 women who daily collect trading stamps; they have set themselves up as the arbiters of the rights of others with a tyranny which history never has seen excelled.
> This feeling has manifested itself in some States where laws have been passed; where the Legislatures acting at the behest of certain associations, who are working solely for their own selfish gain, have decided against the people, and in the interest of these classes. In some States, Legislatures, without the courage to act directly, have seen fit to pass tax laws against trading stamps which are so burdensome as to make it impossible for the stamp companies to operate.
> The Supreme Court of the United States has refused to interfere with those laws on the ground that the right to make them rests with the State, and cannot be reviewed by that court.
> The question, therefore, comes squarely up to the people. It comes squarely up to the millions of women in this country who know and have experienced the benefits of trading stamps and coupons; who have been able to provide things for their homes which would have been impossible to them had not the trading stamp been given to them by their merchants when they bought goods.
> The women of this country are a power. Their voice is the one which is heard in the home. They have simply to exert that power to show to the member of the Legislature who is acting for certain interests that they—the women— do not purpose to be ignored. They have simply to indicate that they do not want the Legislature to take its directions from a small class of people, but rather from the mass as represented in the homes of America.
> The question simply gets down to this point:—
> Are the people of America going to consent to allow the Legislatures of the various States to take away from them a right—which should be as free as the air they breathe—to receive a cash discount in the shape of a trading stamp or a coupon, for the trade which they take to their merchants? Are they going to permit, without protest the revocation of a privilege which has been theirs from time immemorial simply because some association is active enough to lobby a law through the Legislature?
> The abrogation of freedom of trade is in the hands of the State Legislatures. Unless, therefore, those Legislatures receive their instructions from the people, laws which will hamper trade, and react on the people, are likely to be passed.
> Do you want the trading stamp, the coupon, the premium token, through the combined use of which $125,000,000 in merchandise is given back annually to the people, to be permitted to exist? Surely it is worth enough to you to make you insist that your representatives in the Legislature of your State shall act for you. You do not want the Legislature to tell you that your merchant no longer shall be permitted to give you a trading stamp in recognition of your patronage.
> Are you willing to do this?
> We have no hesitation in saying to the women of America:
> THIS IS YOUR FIGHT!

Ask Every Salesman If He Has These Credentials.

The best credential that a strange salesman can have is one of the above specialty stamps. If he has that, you as a retailer will know that his employer has been a great deal more careful about employing him than many employers are, about hiring salesmen.

One of the big points about orders bearing the specialty stamp is that they shall not be padded or corrupted in any way. Therefore the necessity of getting salesmen to use the specialty stamp who will carry the plan out.

If you confine your specialty dealings entirely to salesmen using the stamp, you will be in good safe company and you can't go wrong.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change whatever for the week. Business is continuing fair and most buyers are coming regularly into the market, but nobody appears to be anticipating his wants very much. Prices show no change at any point from last week.

Coffee.

Rio and Santos are perhaps a shade lower than the highest point reached a couple of weeks ago, but the market is still steady to firm. The demand is fair but is from day to day for actual wants only. Mild coffees are still high, but show no change for the week. The demand is fair. Java and Mocha are unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market is entirely unchanged from a week ago. Considerable sugar has been shipped from Cuba, but much of it has gone abroad, especially to England, and this has kept the market up; 6.02 is about the highest quotation, although Porto Rico is selling at about 20 points below that. Refined sugar is unchanged from last week, the demand being good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is seasonably active, although the demand will shortly diminish. Prices are unchanged. Sugar syrup is still high and in quiet demand. Molasses unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are still unsettled and dull. There has been some talk of an advance of ½ cent in peaches, but this is certainly not affecting the Eastern markets. Apricots, raisins, currants and other dried fruits are quiet and unchanged.

Fish.

There is nothing whatever to say about mackerel that has not been said every week for the past several months. Stocks of Norways particularly are very low and prices very high. Much of the demand is compelled to go unsatisfied because of light stocks of the wanted sizes. Cod is still very high and very scarce. Salmon is fairly active and the lower grades of Alaska are still tending upward, but without change for the week. Domestic sardines, quarter oils, are now being quoted at $2.70 in a large way f. o. b. The new season's fishing will begin shortly, but whether it will affect the market is of course problematical. Imported sardines scarce and high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes remain unchanged for the week; demand quiet. Corn is gradually working up and the position is generally quite strong. The demand is good. Peas are dull and still inclined to be heavy. Apples are quiet and are not showing their usual active demand at this season because of the very low price of fresh apples. California canned goods are wanted because of the lightness of stocks on the Coast, and also with the expectation that the coming season's goods will be higher than the present price. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The butter market is active, with very light receipts. Prices are unchanged throughout. The consumptive demand is absorbing everything on arrival, and the general situation is very firm. The only relief which can come is an increase in the make, which is not likely for two or three weeks.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at an advance of ½ cent a dozen. There is a good consumptive demand, and receipts continue below average for the season. The quality is very good and the market is healthy. Holders are beginning to store eggs, but not in very large quantities because of the light receipts. Prices being paid are about 10 per cent. above last year.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm with a light consumptive demand and very small stocks. The situation is healthy on the present basis, and no immediate change is in sight until the new make arrives in June.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are perhaps a shade higher than a week ago. The demand is fair. Marrows are about 10 cents per bushel higher than last week on account of scarcity. The demand is good. California limas show no change, and green and Scotch peas, although scarce, are dull.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are firm and unchanged, with a light consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are steady and in light demand. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are dull and unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Conditions are unchanged here in our evaporated apple market. The jobbing trade is buying small quantities and paying full prices. Export business is at a complete standstill.

Speculators have been a little more active, but they are only picking out the more desirable lots.

The market is quotable at 4¾ to 5 cents per pound for prime, with the higher grades selling at up to 7 cents, all in 50-pound boxes.

Raspberries are firmer, and desirable stock is very scarce. The market is quotable at 28 to 29 cents per pound, f. o. b. in barrels.

Imported Fish Specialties.

With the coming of spring weather there has been a falling off in the demand for salt herrings, except for Norwegian herrings, for which the demand continues very steady. Prices are unchanged, and in spite of the diminished demand, no weakness has developed in the market, as stocks of all kinds of salt herrings are comparatively very small and are likely to go into consumption before the hot weather sets in.

Mackerel, particularly Norwegian, continues in good hand-to-mouth demand, and prices remain firm, as available stocks are held in very few and strong hands.

The imported sardine situation shows very little change. Hardly anything has been added to the stock of Norwegian sardines in this country, first of all, because very little is to be had in Norway, and secondly and principally, because the prices which Norwegian packers are obtaining for their sardines from the countries now at war are so high that the American importer cannot possibly compete in the buying field. The trade here simply will not pay those high prices for Norwegian sardines. Consequently the consnmption has decreased very materially. Some parcels of inferior quality of Norwegian smoked sardines, principally large fish, have been brought over here, but the trade in general objects to anything that is not really fine in the line of Norwegian sardines, and those who brought over those cheaper goods have troubles of their own. The consumer of Norway sardines has gotten used to good stuff, and will simply not be satisfied with this inferior and poor quality. Imports of Norway sardines will therefore not increase until either the public gets used to paying the same prices which are obtainable in Europe to-day, or until conditions change and supplies become more plentiful, and prices more reasonable.

Portuguese sardines are following in the wake of the Norwegian product, and prices are steadily advancing. There is no reason to complain about this advance, as Portuguese sardines have not advanced in nearly the same proportion as Norwegian goods

French sardines, that is, the lit is coming over here, continue to the same high prices to those who want the very best and are to pay for it.

Rochester (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce is now taking a referendum vote among its members on the Stevens Bill, which aims to give manufacturers of trade-marked merchandise the right to fix the retail price. The Chamber has issued some literature on the subject, in which it places the arguments for the bill side by side with the arguments against the bill. Arguments for the bill have been published, therefore only the arguments against the bill are given here:—

Some reasons why the Rochester Chamber of Commerce should not support the Stevens Standardized Price Bill:—

First.—In respect of general interests:—

(a) That the consumer does not demand the supposed benefits of the act.

(b) That it is highly specialized legislation running counter to the means of open competition and distribution.

(c) That it endeavors to impose an artificial stability to a small section of distribution with the purpose of curing a condition never momentous and decreasingly active.

(d) That it disregards forces compelling greater recognition of an increasingly centralized and socialized Federal Government.

Second.—In respect of the interest of "the vendor" (so-called in Stevens Bill S. 3,945 and H. R. 9,671).

(a) That a negligible number is asking for or desires the enactment of the bill.

(b) That trade-marked and special brand goods enjoy ample protection, as evidenced by the growth of the small group of vendors most active in advocacy of the bill.

(c) That by reason of priority in production, coupled with national advertising, monopoly in principle will follow from the bill.

(d) That the existing Federal Trade Commission can be enabled to deal with vicious price cutting.

(e) That "Do It for Rochester" should not lead to the indorsement of the bill, for only harm to Rochester can accrue from it unless it were to benefit the entire nation.

Third.—In respect of the interest of the retail distributor:—

(a) That the majority of such distributors neither requires (nor desires) the enactment of the bill.

(b) That the retail distributor is held responsible by the consumer for the quality of all merchandise branded or misbranded and that it is false to assume that branded merchandise possesses any intrinsic virtue over unbranded merchandise.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet without change; low and medium grades steady to firm. Still some talk of a tea duty being imposed in this country.—Coffee quiet and unchanged; general tone firm.—Sugar very high and somewhat unsettled; raws quoted at 6.02 and granulated 7 to 7.10.—All canned vegetables unchanged on last week's basis. Most lines steady to firm with the possible exception of peas.—Salmon firm; low grade Alaskas very strong; demand fair.—Domestic sardines very scarce.—Prunes still easy and somewhat unsettled. Coast holders of peaches feeling firmer, but Eastern markets unchanged. Raisins and currants firm; demand fair.—Wheat steady after a decline.—Flour unchanged from last week; quiet demand.

Federal Court Says Sausage Mustn't Contain More Than Two Per Cent. of Water.

A most important decision of great interest to meat packers, sausage makers and the grocery trade generally, was handed down during the week by the United States District Court at St. Louis, in which it held that sausage containing more than 2 per cent. cereal and 3 per cent. water was adulterated under the Federal Food Law and upholding the rulings of the Department of Agriculture in this respect. The case in which the opinion was rendered was that of the Independent Packing Co. of St. Louis against David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, in which the packing concern sought to have the Secretary enjoined from enforcing the ruling promulgated by his predecessor, Secretary Wilson, limiting the use of cereal and water to the percentages named. This is the second time the court has decided adversely to the interests of the packing company. At the trial of the first case it denied the injunction and the Independent Packing Co. appealed. The United States Circuit Court sent back the case for the reason that it was of opinion that the contention of the packing company that the addition of water and cereal to the sausage did not impair the wholesomeness of the product had not been successfully controverted. This last question the same court has now decided against the packer.

We made some examination of the scheme of the Atlantic Stamping Co. some time ago. It is probable that it has somewhat more behind it than some of the schemes whose stock is offered retailers, but we nevertheless advise retailers not to invest in it or in any other enterprises of the same kind. They are foreign in every sense, and over their management minority stockholders can have no possible control.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please publish or hand the following letter to Mr. Smedley or to anybody giving us advice.

M. Eiseman & Sons, wholesale cash grocers, are selling goods to private families even after being notified to this effect. Can anybody give us a remedy as how to stop this?

Thanking you for the favor.
Yours truly,
C. M. Hertzog.

The concern referred to, M. Eiseman & Son, are Philadelphia jobbers doing business at 817 North Second street. Of course they have a legal right to sell whoever they like, retailer or consumer. There is no "remedy" there. Whether they have a moral right to pose as jobbers, and get the benefits that come to them as jo such as direct buying accom tions, jobbers' discounts and things, and at the same tim retail business, is quite a question. The retail trade take the position—and mos bers will agree with it—that tailer should patronize a who sells his, the retailer's c ers. And that is where the r lies.

We think it is rathe less to give out as much fa formation as that paragrap tains. If we are not very mistaken every flour mill country sells flour sight dra bill of lading. We never r any cash discount, and we think any flour mill gives a any cereal manufacturers lowing 2 per cent. we do no it. Many other items in t are handled on a smaller d than you mention—lima salt and canned goods. The universal discount on canne and vegetables is 1½ per c

What a Foreigner Said

A foreigner visiting in this country lately, whose coffee is a sort of religion with him, said after drinking our Jamestown brand of Harisco Standardized Coffee,

"That is the best Coffee I have been able to secure in America"

This is really expert testimony, and we are glad to get it. "The best coffee in America," is a pretty strong statement, but really we believe it is not too strong for the Harisco line. Frankly, we know no competitor who hunts as hard as we do to get top-notch coffees. Not only must they be right in the beginning, but they must stay right, because one of the big things about the Harisco Standardized Line is uniformity. Five years from now, the Harisco Standardized Coffee you buy from us—if the earth produces it—will be like what you get to-day.

If you don't see how pushing such Coffees can help your business, write us, and let us tell you more.

Got a Car Yet?

I'll be dinged if it don't seem as if everybody was getting automobiles, blame me if it don't.

Why all my customers have 'em. Of course there's a reason, as my old friend Bill Postum would say. The reason is that my customers make so much money off them justly celebrated goods of mine that they don't know what to do with it.

I suppose they'll be putting it into flying machines next.

But it ain't alone my customers—everybody seems to be getting a car of some sort.

The other day I was in a little town where there's six grocers. I counted up and every one of 'em had a car. What d'ye know about that? Yet if you talk to 'em they'll all say they ain't making any money.

People seem to be able to grab the money out of the air to buy a car with. Two or three of my neighbors—I know all about 'em and know what they make—they have cars and they keep 'em at a public garage, too. Even with my enormous salary, I can't do it. If somebody would come along and put out a car that would eat swill instead of gasoline, maybe I could keep it, but I'll be blamed if I can see gasoline at 30 cents a gallon.

Still a lot of other ginks do it that ain't got any more than I have.

At least, that's what my wife says.

I find a big bunch of my customers have Fords that they work on week days and drive in on Sundays. That's the scheme. One fellow picked up a second-hand Ford for $300—he says it would run with no engine in. He unbuttons the body in about five minutes and put on a box to deliver goods. When he wants to take a ride he buttons her back on and there he is. Yep, it's an all right scheme.

He does everything to that boat but grease it. It rambles right along just the same. When his tires bust he fixes 'em up with spearmint and goes on. It's a great little old car, the Ford is; you can't insult it. To be sure, you can't get very proud of it.

I was talking with another customer of mine last week, asking him why he didn't get a delivery car. Said he couldn't afford it, but we counted up and he had about $650 in his two wagons. He give $200 apiece for his nags and $125 apiece for his wagons. That's $650, ain't it? Why I told him, I said one delivery car that you could get for $750, would do the work of both your teams and wouldn't cost as much to keep.

He didn't agree with that, but it's a fact all the same.

And suppose one of his nags dies on him? How about that?

The scheme I'd work if I had a store in a small place would be the one car and two body scheme. I'd buy a regular car with an extra body that you could put on and off and I'd make the thing pay for itself by delivering goods for me and then on Sundays I'd have my rides for nothing.

One man that works that stunt told me last fall he saved $5 a week by it. D'ye get that? It costs him $5 less to keep his car than it costs to do without it. That's going some, ain't it?

That used to be worked with delivery nags. You'd work 'em all the week and then put them in a fall top or a carry all on Sunday and take a ride. But there ain't any pep in that any more. Nowadays the wife and the kids wouldn't give 2 cents to go out behind a delivery horse on Sunday afternoons—it's too blamed slow. They get everybody's dust and after the old beast has jogged along steady for an hour they still ain't out of sight of home.

Why I'd even rather have one of these three-wheeled motorcycles with a box on than a regular delivery team. That delivers goods just as well as anything if there ain't too many of 'em, and you can go out in it Sundays if the wife's willing to sit in the box. If she ain't willing, let her run alongside. Take some of the stuck-upness out of her.

You know some of the biggest automobile people are selling cars on installments like the scale and cash register people. I figure that ought to sell millions of cars that wouldn't be sold for straight cash at all. Maybe they'll get [illegible] dollar down and a dolla[illegible] that's my size. "The Boss Is Away To-Day."—What condition of mind does his absence put you in?

What attitude do you take in fulfilling the day's duties when the head of the house is out of town?

Brushing aside every semblance of sham and standing in the light of the naked truth, what's your programme?

Lack of restraint is a wonderful test. It's a very interesting one.

Character is read, loyalty or disloyalty is disclosed when the boss is off the job.

When the boss is off the job is your opportunity—your opportunity to excel, to stick close and hard and knuckle down to things in dead earnest. The idea of loafing or easing up or for a moment losing interest should be the farthest notion from your mind.

The way to keep the boss off the job is to make it unnecessary for him to be on it.

It follows that service is the key to success and happiness. Disloyalty demeans, it stunts growth. It narrows you down to the level of a knave. At bottom of all worthy advancement is loyalty, and so long as you trangress this principle your life will be "bound in shallows and miseries."

No. 358.—Legal Responsibility for Damage as Between Manufacturer and Dealer.

The law is becoming more and more firmly settled that a manufacturer who makes a machine, or a store appliance, or a food product, and sells it to a dealer to sell again, is liable to any purchaser who is injured by reason of some defect in its construction or manufacture. It used to be a theory—and there are some cases to support it—that where a manufacturer made something and sold it to a dealer, he was responsible only to the dealer, for the dealer was the only person with whom he had any contractual relations. If the product, whatever it was, was sold by the dealer to a consumer, and in the hands of the latter it went wrong, showing defective manufacture or construction, the consumer must look to the dealer for redress because it was the dealer with whom the consumer dealt.

The courts soon awoke to the fact that this was a gross injustice because it made a dealer responsible for something over which he had no possible control, and which he could not even know about, viz., the construction and composition of another man's product. The courts then began to decide that a manufacturer—who alone can know whether his product is good or not—should be held responsible for defective construction or composition in the hands of the ultimate consumer, no matter how many hands it had to pass through before it reached the ultimate consumer. This is of course as it should be, and nothing short of it would be fair.

The clearest decision on this point of law which I have ever seen has just been handed down by the New York Court of Appeals in a case involving an automobile. The manufacturer of the car sold it to a dealer, who sold it to a consumer. While the consumer was using it one of the wheels broke in a way that revealed defective construction, and some damage was done. The owner of the car did not bother with the dealer but entered suit at once against the manufacturer. The lower court gave him a verdict, the manufacturer appealed, and the verdict was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. In its decision the court in a very few words summed up the responsibility of the manufacturer to ultimate consumers, as the weight of the law at present holds it. The following extracts from the decision are clear. I think I should say that the manufacturer defended first on the ground that he was responsible only to the dealer, and second on the ground that he bought the wheel from another manufacturer and therefore was not responsible anyway:—

> The manufacturer of a finished product of machinery which is to be used without new tests and which in the nature of things is reasonably certain to place life and limb in peril, is under duty to make it carefully, and for a neglect to do so is liable to the owner who purchased it of a retail dealer. Such liability is not relieved by the fact that the manufacturer obtained the defective part of a reputable maker if a reasonable inspection would have disclosed the defect.
> From this survey of the decisions there thus emerges a definition of the duty of a manufacturer which enables us to measure this defendant's liability. Beyond all question the nature of an automobile gives warning of probable danger if its construction is defective. This automobile was designed to go 50 miles an hour. Unless the wheels were sound and strong, injury was almost certain. It was as much a thing of danger as a defective engine for a railroad. The defendant knew the danger. It knew also that the car would be used by persons other than the buyer. This was apparent from its size; there were seats for three persons. It was apparent also from the fact that the buyer was a dealer in cars, who bought to retail. The maker of this car supplied it for the use of purchasers from the dealer. The dealer was indeed the one person of whom it might be said with some approach to certainty that by him the car would not be used. Yet the defendant would have us say that he was the one person whom it was under a legal duty to protect. The law does not lead us to so inconsequent a conclusion.
> We think the defendant was not absolved from a duty of inspection because it bought the wheels from a reputable manufacturer. It was not merely a dealer in automobiles; it was a manufacturer of automobiles; it was responsible for the finished product; it was not at liberty to put the finished product on the market without subjecting the component parts to ordinary and simple tests.

This seems unanswerable, but one of the judges disagreed with it and filed a dissenting opinion on the ground that the manufacturer should not be held responsible to anybody but his immediate buyer.

The above extracts represent what would be considered the weight of the law, not only in the case of an automobile, but in the case of everything else that is sold by the manufacturer to dealers to be sold again. If they go wrong the dealer cannot be held responsible unless he has made the transaction his own by giving his own individual guarantee. I will discuss that presently. There are several companion cases on record in which suit was begun against the dealer instead of the manufacturer, and in which the court held that the responsibility was not the dealer's, as he could know no more about the construction of the article than the consumer. These cases as well as the others of the type of the above automobile case, point directly back to the manufacturer, as they should do. They fix upon him the responsibility of warranting, either expressly or by implication, that his article is as it should be; that the wheels on his automobile are good enough to stand the strain; that the colors in his fabric will not fade unduly; that the steel in his farm implement are without flaw which inspection could discover; that the prepared beef in his tin is free from disease germs, and so on and so on.

But the whole situat changed if the dealer gives antee of his own. In that ca just as responsible as the m turer and an injured consu sue him under his own gua Many dealers are foolish en do this, but they always tak No dealer should guarant thing that he does not kno lutely about; his repres should be "the manufacture tee is so and so," and in all ature and his advertising h be particular to say "guara the manufacturer," never "v antee."

Grocers' Wasteful Ways of Bread.

A Western retail grocers' a has issued a statement calling to the wasteful methods of s grocers in selling bread. Th ing extracts from the statemer interesting:—

> Before us is the route she bakery delivery man covering iod of three months and s the sales in money and th bread returns. It is appall proves that for extravagan retail grocer, who forever about there being nothing business, is more profligat bloated bond holders.
> Just take this one grocer list as an example. In De he sold $50 worth of bread stale returns were 16 per cen January he sold $51 and r 11 per cent. In February hi were $51, and his stale mounted to the enormous los per cent.
> Now put this extravagant record up against that of competent and careful merch
> This man sold $33 worth o in December, his returns per cent. In January he in his sales to $34 and reduced turns to 3 per cent. In Febr raised his sales on this br bread to $40 and reduced turns to 1 per cent. Right d the very lowest notch.
> In some sections the sale o bread is killing the sale of bread. If it is not discontin will eventually wreck both th ers and the grocers' bread h and send the housewives b baking at home.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

Waterbury, Conn., Mar. 15, 1916.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I inclose copy of handbill announcing opening of my new store for your criticism. I also inclose copy of handbill put out by the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., which opened a branch store near my location. What do you think about it?

Yours truly,
M. J. WALL.

The Great A. & P. Tea Co. circular was a typical chain-store circular so far as the type arrangement was concerned. It was printed in black on white paper and under the circumstances is interesting enough to reproduce:—

THE TEAS TALK for THEMSELVES

THE GREAT ATLANTIC & PACIFIC TEA CO.
719 East Main St. Waterbury, Conn.

The Economy plan of doing business is really told in full in the introduction. Readers hereof will note, however, that most of the goods advertised are not well known brands. Occasionally there is one, to create an impression, but most of the offerings are either bulk goods or the Tea Company's own brands. This is pretty powerful advertising, however. I mean the whole scheme of sloughing off all the expenses that usually make selling prices higher and then offering goods at rock bottom. There isn't any question about it, it is a scheme that takes strong hold of the average consumer. If I were a retailer whose business was not satisfactory, or who like Mr. Wall, was compelled to compete with an Economy store, I should take a leaf out of the Economy book.

Mr. Wall's circular was smaller than the Tea Company's and was printed in black on yellow paper. In the next column is the reduced reproduction.

I confess I don't think this is very strong. A new store that opens in a residence neighborhood always has the benefit of the fact that people are curious about it. If that fact is recognized and played up, it is pretty easy to get a good crowd on the first day. Whether anything permanent comes from the crowd depends on circumstances. The way to play up a new store is to give people excuse to go there on the first day. Either by something like demonstrations, or souvenirs, or especially low prices, or some other special attraction. I don't think Mr. Wall has quite done that, in this circular he sends me. I think he ought to have said something about why this store should be patronized. These prices may be obviously low to the people of Waterbury, but I don't believe they are to everybody. Certainly it would have been better to g regular price, if this is a price. Let Mr. Wall put hi the place of a consumer wh near his new store, and w his circular; would he be i by anything in it to go there member that consumers in bury are not hunting a store, they are already conne with one and they will cont stay where they are unless t convinced that they can do somewhere else. It is a scheme to try a circular like your wife. Put it before h ask her whether as a consu would be persuaded by it to a new store. If she says no, she says yes, let her tell you and you will then pretty well whether the advertising is go not.

This Tells the Tale

¶ A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Through Co-operative Delivery One Merchant Saved $742 a Year

The Twin Towns of Champaign and Urbana (Ind.) Now Have Four Co-operative Deliveries a Day, and With Satisfaction to Consumers and Far Smaller Expense to Merchants. How the Plan is Worked.

Interest in co-operative delivery plans among retailers of the East, where such enterprises have not grown up like they have in the West, seems to be rapidly increasing. This paper is constantly receiving inquiries from Eastern retailers and associations of retailers, as to how to start co-operative delivery in the average sized town, what it costs, what it saves and so on. It is a good field for retail merchants' associations, for every merchant who has been affiliated with a properly managed co-operative delivery plan seems to agree that he saves enough out of it, when compared with the cost of his individual delivery department, to make a decided difference in his yearly profits.

We are advised that the towns of Champaign and Urbana, which lie practically together in Indiana, have had rather a marked success with their co-operative delivery plan. According to some of the smaller merchants it has done more for them than for the larger ones. One man formerly paid $950 a year for his delivery service; now he pays $208. Saving, $742.

To understand the change that has come over Champaign and Urbana, let it be said that before the present plan was adopted, and while each merchant was running his own wagons, if a good customer called up five minutes before noon and requested the delivery of a loaf of bread to be used at the noon-time meal, it was held to be good business policy to hustle the loaf to the housewife regardless of the fact that the cost of taking it from the store to the table under those circumstances was several times greater than the profit on the loaf—not to say its entire cost. The extent to which customers abuse the good nature of the merchants on this score is almost past belief.

It was determined at the outset that under the new plan no gratuitous delivery of any kind or class should be made, and that all special deliveries which involved a service outside of the routine should carry a penalty to the customer in the form of a special fee.

First, the plan provided that all the storekeepers, big and little, should come into the delivery organization on the same basis. A board of wholly disinterested appraisers was selected to place a value on every article of the equipment turned in by the merchants to the new delivery company. If the appraisement of the equipment offered by any merchant was unsatisfactory to him he was privileged to retain it and dispose of it privately in his own way and at his own price, paying into the company the amount of the appraisement within twenty-four hours. Not a single merchant took advantage of this privilege.

Each merchant received the note of the new company in the amount for which his equipment was appraised. These notes were not to draw interest until after two years. The shares in the new company were put out at a hundred dollars par value, and each merchant was obliged to buy one share without respect to the size of his business. This placed every member on an equal footing with his fellows.

Sixteen grocers and five butchers or market men signed the articles of agreement. The shareholders elected a board of seven directors, who in turn elected officers and chose a general manager to run the business. It was immediately decided by the directors that a feeling of permanence would be given the enterprise by the purchase of ground and the erection of a building to serve as a central station. As the fund in the treasury from the sale of stock was not sufficient to buy the property that seemed best suited to the purpose, ten of the members signed a joint note on which $3,000 was borrowed from the bank. This plan was pursued because of the fact that the financial circumstances of some of the members required that the burden of expense and obligation at the outset, so far as they were concerned, should be as light as possible. The building itself was financed through the building and loan association.

It is now very generally recognized by the merchants that it would have been very much better had they been able to capitalize the enterprise at the outset for a larger sum. At times the inadequate capitalization has operated as a distinct disadvantage.

Another piece of foresight on the part of the directors of the delivery service company was a keen realization of the importance of selecting a thoroughly competent manager and one who was distinctly an outsider entirely unconnected with the business or family of any shareholder. Aside from the manager the employees consist of a bookkeeper and seventeen drivers.

Of the forty horses and mules acquired by the new delivery company, twenty-two are now in service; and of the thirty-one wagons and nine trucks turned over to the company, fourteen wagons and six trucks have been eliminated. When each merchant made his own deliveries thirty-seven men and boys were employed to do this work; today it is done by twenty-two—and done far more efficiently.

No little difficulty was encountered in reaching a decision as to the basis on which the service company should receive its support. Finally it was determined that the merchants should be charged 4 cents for each delivery; of this, half a cent was figured as going to the equipment fund.

At the start the attempt was made to give five deliveries daily—at 7.30, 9.15 and 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and 2.30 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. This was the schedule by which the wagons left the central station to pick up the merchandise at the various stores. It was soon found, however, that five deliveries a day were too many, and consequently only four are now made—8.05 and 10.10 in the morning and 2.30 and 4.45 in the afternoon. This arrangement has been found to be far more practical from the viewpoint of the merchants and at least fairly satisfactory to the customers of the stores. One of the chief difficulties in the schedule of five daily deliveries was the fact that the routine was being constantly overturned by trouble with equipment. Again, it was open to at least two objections that prevailed under the old plan—those of overworking the delivery horses and, on par heavy days, of putting tc strain on the men and boy

At first no small am trouble was encountered i ing the ordering habits of ers. Education in this d however, has gone forward ter pace than many of the m expected. Some of them that many of their best c could never be brought to r the necessity of thinking in and of ordering in time to c particular delivery that wou the goods to the house in serve the convenience of th hold.

On the score of educati tomers to conform to the and to pay roundly for any privileges received, one sto says:—

"I am decidedly surprise way customers yield to the quirements and seem to unc them. For example, one of customers lately called up fo of bread she had forgotten t and asked to have it rushe her in a hurry. I explain the last regular delivery l and that if I sent it out t must do so as a special, whic involve a charge to her of for the delivery. She was satisfied to have the bread s to pay the charge as a pen her forgetfulness and her fa order in time. Do you th would have received the su that she should pay 10 cents delivery of that loaf of brea the old plan without taking Not for a minute! She wou been angry through and t and probably have taken he elsewhere; but now she that her 10 cents will go delivery company and not In other words, she ates the fact that the deliver pany is in the business of de groceries, just as I am in th ness of selling groceries, a if she demands a special p service from that company s pay for it, just as she pays loaf of bread she buys."

The merchants admit tha are still a few customers in th cities who are not so reason so quick to adapt themselves new order of things as this w A few of them kick vigo against the new delivery r ments; but their education i merchants have no hesitance

ing their attitude toward the ise. One of them says:—

king those deliveries. My ent represented an invest-of $7,000, and I also built a at a cost of a thousand dollars. You can figure for yourself the carrying charges on this investment.

"I confess that I was never able to deliver my goods acccording to schedule under the old plan. Something always happened to overturn the routine and throw the schedule out of commission. In short, my customers received their goods irregularly.

"Under the old plan my delivery expenses from March 1st to June 21st were $1,400, or an average of $14.57 a day. Since the organization of the company, from June 21st to December 20th, under the new system, my delivery expense has been $1,180, or a daily average of $5.51. Of course the delivery company is losing something like $300 a month at the present time; but my share of the deficit, if I ever have to pay it, will not be anything like what I am saving. In this connection it should be remembered that the delivery company is only learning how to work to an advantage, how to save time and expense, and how to bring in extra income from the outside.

"When the old plan of individual deliveries was in operation our leakage was a very considerable sum every month. For example, a boy would have an accident and break a basketful of eggs. Do you think he would report this? Well, not to speak of! He would simply sneak round after he returned, load up again with the required number of eggs, and deliver them. Nothing of this kind can happen under the check that is kept on merchandise by the delivery company, which is strictly accountable for every item it receives."

One of the little merchants makes this statement:—

"Do I want to go back to the old plan? Honestly, I don't see how I ever got along under it. Then I paid my delivery men $12 a week and maintained a horse and kept a delivery wagon in repair. If you are at all acquainted with horses you know they can almost eat their heads off, especially when worked as hard as almost every delivery horse is made to work. If anybody can keep a delivery horse in good working condition at a feeding expense of less than $300 a year he is doing better than I can. Then there is an additional cost of not less than $30 for shoeing the horse and blacksmith work on the wagon—to say nothing of interest and insurance on an investment of at least $350. In other words, the wages of my delivery man, the feeding of the horse and the blacksmithing bill amounted to about $900 a year.

"My delivery expense under the new plan never exceeds $5 a week and does not average more than $4. At $4 a week it would amount to $208 a year. The difference between $950 and $208 is $742. This sum on the right side of the ledger, in a little, single-barreled business like this, is a whole lot of money—and it looks mighty good to me! Talk about the high cost of delivery! I realize now that this was the thing that was pushing me hard and keeping me poor. When the new company began operation on the 21st of last June, and I said good-by to old Billy, I felt rather bad to see the horse go; but now I realize that it was one of the greatest things that ever happened to this little store. It has done more than any other one thing to put me squarely on my feet."

A little idea of the efficiency of the service under the present conditions—which is working with fifteen fewer men and boys, eighteen fewer draft animals and twenty fewer wagons—may be had from the record of the day preceding Christmas, on which the system delivered 3,000 separate orders. Eighteen hundred is an average day's delivery.

Sugar Tariff Will Continue.

Without a record vote the Senate passed the free sugar repeal bill on Tuesday. It now goes to conference. An amendment offered by Senator Works proposing a duty on lemons was defeated by a vote of 29 to 44, La Follette voting with the Democrats and Phelan, of California, voting with the Republicans. The bill retains the tariff on sugar, which the last tariff bill was to remove on May 1st next.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, April 14, 1916.

The trade was greatly shocked during the week to learn that W. B. A. Jurgens, head of the W. B. A. Jurgens Co., wholesale grocers of Brooklyn, had committed suicide at his home. No reason has as yet been assigned for the act. He had not been feeling quite himself for some days, but the indisposition appeared not to be serious, and there is no reason to believe that the condition of his business was not everything that could be desired.

The National Coffee Roasters' Association has issued a special call for a one day meeting at the La Salle Hotel, Chicago, for Thursday, May 4th, next, for the purpose of taking action on the report of the Joint Trade Committee on the National Coffee Campaign. At this meeting the committee will present its plans for the campaign, and the matter will be generally discussed. It is reported that N. W. Ayer & Sons, Philadelphia advertising agents, will handle the expenditure of the funds and that in all about $150,000 will be spent. A representative of the agency will be present at the above meeting. All of the funds have not yet been raised, but a considerable percentage has been.

The National Trade Association of this city is circulating extracts from an opinion on the Stevens bill furnished them by H. H. Byrne, a lawyer of Washington, D. C. It will be remembered that the Stevens bill would permit manufacturers of trade-marked products to fix the wholesale and retail selling prices. The extracts from his opinion follow:—

> It is unconstitutional because it seeks to regulate commerce after it (commerce) ceases to be interstate.
> It is an unwarranted reaching over and into controlling of purely local affairs of the State.
> The bill proposes to establish proprietary rights in subject matter that are neither in the nature of patent or trade-mark and for which no warrant is found in the Constitution.
> It seeks to create Federal power in machinery dealing with subject matter that is purely a matter of contract between private parties, for the enforcement of which ample legal machinery already exists. And it further seeks to make innocent sub-purchasers responsible for violations of contract, knowledge of which they have no means of acquiring.
> The Stevens Bill, if enacted into law, would in effect substitute a law of perpetual control for the most important economic law now involved in trade, namely, the control of prices by the law of supply and demand. It attempts to destroy the possibility of conveying absolute title to commodities.
> It would tend to create a new principle of law which, if given a foothold, would soon be expanded to the control of other incidents to the barter and sale of goods and would enable the original manufacturers to virtually dictate any and all conditions, however remote lated, under which the goods be sold. Messrs. McCormick & Co., of Baltimore, Md., have sent the New York trade the following letter:—

We call your attention to New York House Bill No. 1,504, by Mr. Fullagar.

This is a prohibition bill, and as it is now drawn is broad enough to prevent the sale of flavoring extracts, perfumes and toilet preparations.

Section 1 should be amended by adding to the end thereof the following:—

> Provided that nothing contained in this act shall be held to apply to the manufacture or sale of flavoring extracts, toilet and medicinal preparations and other preparations not manufactured or sold for beverage purposes.

Prompt action is necessary. Wire or write your Senator and Legislator at once, demanding that this bill be amended as suggested.

These prohibition bills when offered have in every instance been amended in accordance with this suggestion.

We have just had a bill passed by the Maryland Legislature curing the same kind of a defect in the prohibition bill offered and passed in the early part of this legislative session.

Make your wishes known in no uncertain terms to your Representatives and they will respond.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet. Ceylon Indias firmer, by reason of the loss of the Clan Campbell cargo. Demand moderate.—Coffee practically unchanged, perhaps with a little better feeling in Rio and Santos. Rio 7s scarce and firm. Brazil developed a firmer tone earlier in the week, but this eased off later.—Sugar advanced. Raws quoted up to 6.08; refined 7.15 to 7.25. All canned goods unchanged. Tomatoes a trifle stronger.—Prunes firmer by reason of an expected short crop; demand fair. All other dried fruits quiet and unchanged. Some holders are asking a shade more for apricots and peaches, but it is still possible to buy at former prices.—Wheat somewhat weaker for the week.—Flour unchanged and in light demand.

Federal Trade Commission Discusses Syrup Case.

It is indicated in a conference ruling just published by the Federal Trade Commission, that refusal of a manufacturer to sell to a retailer because that retailer may cut the retail price on the article might be construed as an unfair trade practice. A complaint such as this, involving the sale of syrup, was brought to the attention of the Commission, but inasmuch as an anti-trust suit has been made of it by the Department of Justice, the Commission refuses to take any action. The conference ruling published by the Commission is as follows:—

> On application for the issuance of a complaint, it appeared that a corporation engaged in interstate commerce in the manufacture and sale of syrups, refused to sell its products to a wholesale grocer in another State, because this grocer advertised and sold these products at prices lower than those made by other jobbers, which conduct was unsatisfactory to the manufacturing company. After the commission had instituted an investigation, but before its completion, the complaining party notified the Commission that the matter had been amicably adjusted to its entire satisfaction, and that it desired that the application should be dismissed. It also appeared that there is pending a suit filed by the Government against the manufacturing corporation, brought under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.
> Held, that under all the circumstances, the matter having been thus satisfactorily adjusted as between the parties and the Government having brought suit under the Sherman Act, it does not appear to the Commission that a complaint should be issued.

If the manufacturer of an unknown brand falsifies about the quality of his brand, he does it to a mere handful of people.

If the manufacturer of a nationally advertised brand falsifies, he does it to one hundred million people.

Which has the greatest incentive to hold his goods up to the represented standard?

The Stevens Bill and Mail Order Competition.

I want to discuss, from the small retailer's standpoint, another phase of the proposed Stevens bill which has not up to now received much attention. It is the effect which the bill would have upon mail-order competition.

Any reader of this paper knows that the Stevens bill will give to manufacturers of trade-marked goods the right to compel jobbers to sell to retailers at a certain price, and the right to compel retailers to sell to consumers at a certain price. The backers of the bill are a number of manufacturers organized under the name of the American Fair Trade League, and they claim that the bill would destroy cutters and thus be a boon to every retailer who is not a cutter and does not wish to be one. The bill has been very widely and exhaustively debated and its advantages and its disadvantages are pretty well known.

But the mail-order phase of it has not received much attention. If the bill passes and is upheld by the courts, it will compel Sears, Roebuck & Co. to sell Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes at 10 cents and will thus cut one of that concern's claws. Other retailers will also be compelled to sell Kellogg's at 10 cents, and therefore there will be no room for the cutter or the mail-order house on Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes.

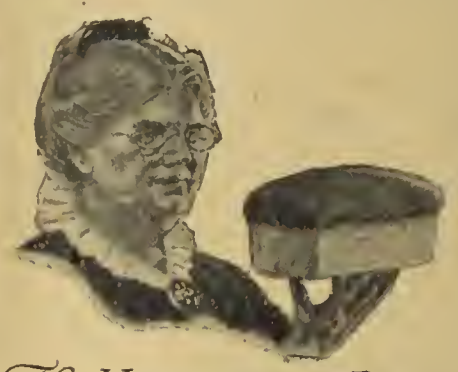
But there will be more room for private brands than there has ever been before. Sears, Roebuck & Co. at once say to their customers: "We have stopped selling Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes because the manufacturer, under the Stevens act, compels us to sell it at an exorbitant price. We have a better article, under our own brand, at 8 cents." The policy of the mail-order houses, and the cutters, will undoubtedly be to fight fixed price package goods with their own brands on which no outsider can fix the price. Will such a fight have any effect? It seems to me that it will. The small dealer will be more out of the running than he is now. He cannot compete, as he can now if he has to, by selling Kellogg's at the mail-order price, nor can he compete by matching his own private brand against the mail-order or the cutter's private brand, because he is not in shape to have his own private brand. He is somewhat put to it now to meet mail-order and chain-store competition, but what he would do if he had to sell every trade-marked brand at a fixed price, without private brands of his own, I cannot see. Of course he will sell some trade-marked goods at the full price; there is no doubt about that, but he is bound to feel, more and more strongly, the competition of the mail-order and chain-store private brands, without any particular weapon to fight back with.

My prediction is that if this bill passes, the retail trade will very shortly come to look on it as the biggest nuisance ever fastened on them.

Selling Flour for Home Bread Baking.

Readers hereof who are also magazine readers have seen appearing lately in several women's magazines, the advertisement which is reproduced herewith. Doubtless they have wondered whose it was and what it was. The advertisement is paid for by the flour millers and is expected to increase the practice of buying flour and making one's own bread. Will it do it? I think not. Millions of women all over the United States have stopped baking their own bread. They are glad to be free from the work involved and from the uncertain results that seem to attend the efforts of most amateur bread makers. Instead of baking their own bread, they buy bakers' bread. Will this advertisement send them back to the old method? No, there isn't a thing in it that would make it worth a housewife's while to go back and make her own bread. No use talking to her about what fine bread she could bake: she knows all about her own bread. Nor does this advertisement answer the unspoken question: Why isn't baker's bread just as good and wholesome as mine?

What can send the housewife back? I don't believe anything can, in most cases. Modern bakers now produce bread that is the equal of the best home-baked bread and the great superior of much of it, and that frequently cannot be told from the home-baked bread. You can't send her back by talking about quality, for the facts are against you. You can send her back if you can prove to her that it is less work to



The Housewife's Pride

THE housewife who serves pure, home-baked bread makes the home meal a delight and a pleasure to all. She shows true motherly pride by giving to her family the most wholesome and strengthening of foods.

And she displays perfect judgment, because home-made bread is not only the most nourishing, but is the most economical of foods.

Made from white flour, bread is highly digestible, and is turned into brain and brawn with the least tax on the digestive organs. The wise housewife bakes her own bread in large quantities, and smiles of pleasure and strong, healthy bodies proclaim her wisdom.

If you think baking bread requires more extra work than it is worth, just try it once. You'll be surprised at the ease with which you can bake bread along with your other cooking. Here's the blastet recipe that will make your table a real thing to be proud of:

GOOD HOME-MADE BREAD

3½ quarts flour; 1 tablespoonful salt; 2 tablespoonfuls sugar; 2 cakes compressed yeast; 3½ cupfuls lukewarm water.

Warm bowls and flour to save time. Sieve flour and salt into bowls. Cream yeast and sugar together until liquid. Add tepid water. Make a well in the flour and stir in yeast and water, also a little flour from sides, leaving a wall of it round the yeast. Cover and put in warm place until surface of yeast is thickly covered with bubbles. Then knead all the flour into the sponge, using the hand. Add more tepid water if dough is too stiff. Put back into bowls, cover and put in warm place to rise. Knead quickly and lightly together. Bake in hot oven (360°) for one hour. Where measures, then let heat gradually decrease. Time will depend on size of loaves.

make her own bread than it is to go to the store and buy it ready-made.

This is getting more and more to be a labor-saving age, and the flour millers are therefore traveling in the direction of the most resistance.

The Enormous Waste of Delivery Service.

All over the land retail grocers who are facing some particularly hard competition are searching through their businesses to find some way of reducing expenses. It is probable that nine out of ten of them could do it by curtailing or even abandoning their delivery department. The fact that chain and economy stores have induced their customers to take away their goods, after paying cash for them, proves that free delivery is not an indispensable adjunct of a retail store.

The average retailer is paying far too much for his delivery service. Even though he does a small business, he often considers it necessary to maintain a team, and often a driver. The drain of this on a small business is tremendous. If it were abandoned, many businesses would at once lea loss column and take their in the profit column—if they hold the business, which ought to be able to do if stores can do it.

Plenty of retailers who are taining a delivery team cou everything they needed to d a pushcart. Plenty more ne deliver at all—all they need is to make it worth their cu ers' while to forego the free ery. The chain stores do tha so can anybody.

Thousands of other re could solve the delivery pr forever by initiating a campa their towns for co-operative ery. An excellent article o Indiana co-operative delivery tem appears elsewhere. A number of retailers in all lines ticularly in country towns, a day waiting and hoping for one of their number to start s campaign, but they lack the e to start it themselves. In th diana case one retailer whos livery service was costing nearly a thousand dollars a gave his customers all the s they needed, through co-ope delivery, for $208. Nothing el the whole realm of merchand offers such a chance of savin day.

The Quality Index

A STORE that sells high-grade merchandise fairly radiates an atmosphere of quality.

The real quality index is the confidence of the customers of the store. That confidence is born of the effort of the owner himself—an effort and intent to sell only goods that will give entire satisfaction to every customer every time.

The grocer who sells the products of National Biscuit Company secures for his store the buyer's confidence in his goods that could be had in no other way.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Condensed Milk Freight Rate Reduced.

A reduction of about 20 per cent. in the freight rate of condensed and evaporated milk will be made as a result of the decision of the Interstate Commerce Comission, which has reduced the classification of this line of goods and placed it on the same basis as other canned goods. The reduction applies to territory east of Buffalo and Pittsburgh and north of the Potomac River. Dealers in the section named were informed of the Commission's decision to-day. The action of the Commission is due to an agitation for better rates begun by Hires Condensed Milk Co., of Philadelphia.

These Manufacturers Will Gratuitously Send Retailers Advertising and Display Matter

In various ways the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has always directed the especial attention of its readers to the question of pushing nationally advertised products to the front. Monthly Contests have been held on the subject, and a half-page advertisement published weekly contains arguments by nationally-known manufacturers for featuring nationally advertised products in order to get the benefit of the extensive advertising which these manufacturers are doing for them. In connection with this, retailers will want to know what manufacturers will supply advertising and display matter free of charge, hence the following list:—

The A. Colburn Co., Philadelphia. Furnishes recipe booklets, advertising envelopes, blotters, printed matter with dealer's name and address thereon, upon receipt of introductory order; particulars on application. To dealers carrying the line, supplies metallic signs, large muslin display signs for salesrooms and printed matter. Spices.

Canned Goods.

here is no change to report in line of canned goods, either tern or Western. Tomatoes, corn and peas, both spot and future, are exactly where they were a week ago, with a quiet demand. Apples quiet and weak. California canned goods show no change and in moderate demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged for the week and in fair request.

Butter.

The butter market is firm with prices unchanged. The make is very light and the consumptive demand is absorbing everything on arrival. Storage goods are exhausted and the trade are being entirely supplied with fresh butter. There will be a continued scarcity until new butter begins to arrive in two or three weeks.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady and prices unchanged. The consumptive demand is moderate but the demand for storage eggs is large, as the quality is the best of the season. Receipts are normal and no important changes in sight as the market is steady on account of the storage demand.

Cheese.

The cheese market is dull; prices unchanged, with a light consumptive demand. Stocks are reported light, but owing to the high prices the consumptive demand is curtailed. Little change will occur until new goods arrive about June 1st.

Provisions.

The demand for all smoked meats is moderate, and the stocks are about normal for the season. No change has occurred during the week in price. Pure and compound lard are firm at unchanged prices, but if there is any change there will probably be a slight advance. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are all unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

A scare about the coming crop of prunes has pushed the market up ¾ of a cent on spot prunes, and about 1 cent on future prunes. Stock now of the large sizes. Other sizes have advanced in proportion. Something like this was needed for prunes have been rather unsettled for some time. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and quiet, as are

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Wheat.

The Government report issued during the week gives the condition of winter wheat on April 1st as 78.3 per cent., which compares with 88.8 per cent. a year ago. This indicates a crop of 495,000,000 bushels, as against 655,000,000 bushels last year and 685,000,000 two years ago. It is the lowest condition reported since 1904, when the condition on April 1st was 76.5 per cent. There is a striking parallel between the crop of 1904 and the present one. The weather conditions over the winter were almost identical with the past winter, and resulted in nearly 5,000,000 acres (15.4 per cent.) being abandoned. The loss in condition from December 1st to April 1st being 11.1 per cent.

Since the 1916 crop was seeded conditions have been very unfavorable and a loss in condition from December 1st to April 1st is 9.4 per cent. Just how much of the area will be abandoned remains to be seen. Undoubtedly a very large percentage of the 37,256,000 acres seeded last year will never be harvested.

From present indications it would seem that 495,000,000 is the maximum that can be expected, provided there is no further deterioration before harvest. The market effect of the report has been offset by the announcement to-day of the huge shipments this week from Argentina and Australia, being nearly 6,000,000 bushels, or 2,000,000 more than last week. With the prospect of short crops here and abroad, and the war continuing until next winter, there is no reason for the American farmer to be worried over the surplus wheat in his bins, nor do we think he will be disposed to market it freely.

We feel confident that the carry-over to the new crop will be very large and that there will be no pressure on the market by reason of excess farm deliveries. Our visible supply should begin to decrease more rapidly. It is now only 18,000,000 more than a year ago, which is not excessive when we consider the crop was 120,000,000 bushels larger.

We believe that the whole future of wheat will depend mainly upon weather in Canada and our own Northwest during the next sixty days. With bright, warm weather during April and May, spring wheat farmers may have the opportunity to overcome the unfavorable start last fall.

We feel very friendly to wheat and believe that declines will prove only temporary unless there should be a sharp decrease in our exports.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There has been no change in the market situation of either salted herrings or mackerel Both continue to sell in a hand-to-mouth way.

Owing to the high prices prevailing for imported sardines there has been quite a curtailment in the demand, probably for the reason that there were still some small lots here and there which were imported before the scarcity of these goods and which were offered at prices below to-day's import cost, but all these lots seem to have gradually gone into consumption and the demand for imported sardines seems to be increasing now daily, in spite of the high prices which the importer is obliged to ask for them if he wants to get his own cost. This is rather gratifying, because it does not seem possible that prices for imported sardines will show a decided decline until after the war is well over. This is occasioned not only by the fact that sardines are scarce, but also by the steadily advancing cost of all raw materials which are used in the packing of the imported sardines.

In the case of Norwegian sardines, we have to figure also with a steadily declining rate of exchange, which makes the goods cost more, so there is really very little chance of seeing lower prices for imported sardines in the near future.

Rice.

During the past week there has been activity in rice circles. The positive strength of the market is being appreciated, and while some buyers affect indifference, more attention is given to offerings and the temper of the market is being cautiously tested. Holders are firm, as resupply can only be attracted in this direction by a higher range of values. The business throughout the country is steadily improving, and this has caused a better demand from the domestic trade, which is carrying very light stocks.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report no improvement over last week. Sugar.

The sugar market rules strong after the advance of yesterday, all refiners quoting basis fine granulated 7.15 cents, with the exception of Pennsylvania, Federal and Warner, who are firm basis 7.25 cents, Pennsylvania having advanced their price to this basis to-day after being withdrawn from the market for several days. Withdrawals against contracts are good and will grow heavier as the season advances. Refiners can ship fairly prompt at present, but as the withdrawal demand continues to grow, shipments are likely to be delayed, and we cannot too strongly urge the trade to order well ahead of their immediate requirements.

The raw sugar market rules very strong to-day, with holders generally advancing their views to equal 6.14 cents. Sale to-day 25,000 bags Cubas for prompt shipment at equal 6.02 cents to the American; also 23,000 bags Cubas for May shipment at equal centrifugals 96 test at 5 1-16 C. & F. equal 6.08 cents, duty paid to operator. It is reported that European countries have recently purchased from 80,000 to 100,000 tons Cubas, and American and Canadian refined. The exchange market rules higher again to-day. Closing bids as follows: April, 5.04 cents; May, June, July, 5.08 cents; August, 5.10 cents; September, 5.09 cents.

Meeting Mail Order Competition.

Wachapreague, Va.,
April 13, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In reply as to how to meet competition on "cut-price articles in catalogue houses," I suggest the following: Get a list of the articles quoted in such issue. Get the very lowest price on same, or similar, in quantities; let several merchants buy together, if necessary, to get a better price, and divide the articles between them. Then meet the catalogue price. If there should be six merchants and six articles let each merchant take one. If he can't buy the cut-price articles from jobbers have his friends order from the catalogue houses.

Hoping to have replies to this and also suggestions as to better ways.

Please advise if you want suggestions of this kind. I have been in the business for thirty years and have studied many points closely.

Yours truly,
A. H. G. MEARS.

We do indeed want every suggestion from subscribers that we can get on this or any other trade subject.

Machines for Manufacturing Grape Juice.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—The prohibition law has prevented the making of wine profitable in North Carolina and the owners of vineyards desire to convert their grapes into unfermented grape juice rather than wine. I am writing to ask if you could inform me where machinery for sterilizing by heating and bottling grape juice could be obtained. If the makers of such machinery have any information in regard to the manufacture of grape juice, etc., such information would be greatly appreciated.

The United Grocers' Corporation.

Boalsburg, Pa., April 6, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—What do you think of the United Grocers' Corporation of Toledo, Ohio?

Will it be a benefit to the grocers in general to belong to the corporation, and will the stock be a safe investment?

They claim they can save us 15 per cent. on the average on all purchases.

Do you think that statement is correct?

Thank you for an early reply.

Yours truly,
A. J. HAZEL.

We have heard nothing of the plans of the United Grocers' Corporation for several months, and have no knowledge of what progress they are making. If they operate a genuine co-operative buying plan, buying in large quantities and distributing in small lots to their members at a small percentage above cost, we see no reason why the plan should not be of general benefit.

As for the saving of 15 per cent., you can easily prove that or disprove it. Get their prices on half a dozen articles and compare them with what you pay now.

To Change to the Cash Basis.

Albany, N. Y., April 10, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Owing to local conditions (A. & P., etc.) on Monday, May 1st, I shall change the business from a credit to a strictly cash business. No delivery.

Wishing to notify my customers to that effect, it seems to me the best way would be to send individual letters.

Will you please give copy or copies of letters that I may glean some information from.

Yours truly,
S.

Here is a suggestion for an introduction to such a letter as could be used for this purpose. It will not be complete until comparative lists of prices are added:—

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

On Monday, May 1, 1916, I shall change this business to a cash business, and shall not be able, after that time, to sell groceries on credit even to my own relatives.

The cash business is the modern business, because it cuts out a lot of expensive waste. I shan't need to keep any books—that saves bookkeeping expense—and I shan't deliver anything—that saves a particularly large slice of expense. With the cash in my hands I can discount all my bills, and that means lower cost and lower selling price.

To show you this is not all talk, look at these two lists. The one header "Before" quotes prices I had to charge while doing a credit business. The other quotes prices on the same goods under the cash system.

Before. After.

Selling Scheme Jewelry at Auction.

Ceres, Va., April 6, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please let me know if I could perhaps make a deal with the N. B. Lobe & Co., and also if you consider them reliable? I want to dispose of the jewelry left on our hands by the National Novelty Import Co.

Also kindly give me name and address of some reliable dealer in old coins. I have quite a lot of old coins.

Thanking you for reply, I am,

Yours very truly,
F. A. CRABTREE.

We advise not dealing with any auction house on this jewelry. You will probably not be satisfied, for our observation is that that is usually the experience most have, particularly those wl small lots.

We know nothing about I Co., the Baltimore auction you name. They have a goc cantile rating. Why don't yc a special sale of the jewelry self? You could probably considerable interest among trade.

TO THE TRADE—No. 5

EXPERIENCE: A grocer in New Jersey started a few years ago with a small order of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale. In 1914 his order was for 300 cases; in 1915 it was for 350 cases, and for 1916 his advance order is for 450 cases.

A grocer in a small Massachusetts town started a few years ago with a small order of Clicquot Club. In 1915 he ordered 100 cases, and for 1916 he has ordered 200 cases.

A grocer in Washington, D. C., who ordered 500 cases in 1915, has ordered 1,000 cases for 1916.

These are just a few "samples" out of literally thousands of instances where Clicquot Club business has built itself up through the popularity and quality of the product and the enterprise of the grocer. Any live retailer anywhere can get similar results if he will let his customers know that he carries Clicquot Club. When volume gets up into the hundreds of cases the total profits become something worth praying for.

If there's a bright young v wanting to make a rep and s me money in a new kind of job, I've got an idea for him that I'll hand over without a cent.

I'd rather do good than eat; honest I would.

The job I mean is professional smeller. It's a classy job and it would pay. After a grocer got over the idea that it was a joke he'd be right in for it.

Here's the idea in a few well chosen words: It ain't good for any grocery store to have a clerk that smells bad. Some clerks do smell bad. Not one grocer out of a dozen seems to notice it when they do. Here comes in the fellow with the trained smeller. He'd come to your store disguised as a salesman, or a customer or a plumber—anything—and he smells around all the clerks. If he finds any of 'em going stale, he reports him and the thing's looked into.

I own up it ain't exactly a job I'd want, but it's honest and there's a great need for it.

When I say not one grocer out of a dozen can find the thing out for himself, that's exactly what I mean. I don't know what ails 'em, but it's a fact that they don't seem to get on to things like that around their own stores. Why you could take a pole cat into some stores and fire him off right in the midst of it, and I'll bet some grocers wouldn't get on to it.

One of my customers told me this on himself last week. He didn't know a blame thing about it till his wife put him on to it.

One of his clerks was named Bob and he'd had him about six or eight months. He was a good sort of chap and he always seemed willing enough, but the boss noticed time and time again that when everybody else in the store was rushed to death, Bob wouldn't seem to have anybody to wait on. That happened time and time again, and he couldn't understand it. He knew it wasn't Bob's fault because there wasn't a lazy bone in his body.

One day his wife said to him:—

"Say, what ails that boy Bob you've got in the store? Why it's terrible! Did you ever smell him?"

No, he hadn't.

"He waited on me to-day and I could hardly stand it. Smells like something dead."

The next chance he got, the boss smelt around himself and he nearly keeled over. Mind you it had been there all the time but he didn't see it until he was told about it. He began to get wise to why Bob never seemed to be busy.

He called him in. Peach of a job, wasn't it?

"Say Bob," he said, "I've noticed a mighty peculiar odor about you, and I believe customers have too. Have you noticed it?"

No, Bob hadn't.

"Well, have you any idea what it is?"

No, he hadn't.

"I don't want you to take offense," said the boss, "but if this is interfering with business I've got to know about it. Do you clean yourself right along?"

Sure, he took a bath every once in a while.

"How often?"

"Why, once a week, like everybody does."

"Well, I want you to take one every day for awhile, Bob, and see what happens."

The poor fellow took it all right but he was fearful cut up. Who wouldn't be? Why the first time I was told that about myself I was awful sore about it.

Well, to make a long story short, Bob washed every day after that and it was all right. He was simply dirty and smelt bad because he was dirty.

"And you never noticed it?" I said to the boss.

"Never did till the wife told me."

"You're a peach," I said. "You'd make a bully bloodhound."

I asked him how many customers he thought that had cost him and of course he didn't know. I'll bet a million dollars it cost him some.

I get into another store where they have a girl cashier that always uses the same kind of perfume, morning, noon and night, and summer. It's stale Come within ten feet of he and you get it right in the Good for business, is it not? it is not. Know what I did I'd picked up a new adve card with that old thing on, Morning, Have You Used Soap?" and while I was waiti the boss one day I handed i her "to look at the cute pict it." She thought it was cu she smelt just the same th time I went in, so it didn across.

Any professional smeller land on her the very first Maybe she can't help it, I know, but I'll take a chan can. If it was my duty to her, I believe I'd know where to go. If she really help it, then she ought to ta other kind of a job. Like fa

No. 359.—A Typical Case of Illegal Substitution.

If there is one word that is better known than any other throughout the whole length and breadth of trade, I suppose it is the word "substitution." The retailer, the wholesaler and the manufacturer all sit up and take notice when you mention substitution. Every reader hereof will therefore read the following letter with a keen fellow-feeling; depending somewhat upon his viewpoint:—

Boston, Mass.

Up to the first of the year we had a customer, a wholesale house, which sold a large quantity of our goods and featured them. This house had been our customer for about ten years. We got into a dispute over a part of a certain bill of goods which they wished to return, and early last January they refused to order any more of us and gave notice that they would sell no more of our brands. Since that time they have been substituting other goods for ours whenever ours are ordered. You will understand that they had built up a large trade for our goods in the ten years, and many of their customers specified our brands when they ordered, and others did not specify but took it for granted that they would get ours, because they always had done so. To all of these the jobber in question is shipping a substitute brand without giving the retail trade any notice whatever. Some retailers notice it at once and reject the substitute brand, but it is astonishing how many do nothing. We have lost considerable trade by this practice and we should crave your opinion as to whether we can do anything.

A. R. McH. & Brother.

I would say that nobody had any right to practice such substitution as this. No man has the right to steal the trade of another. If there are two retailers named Brown doing business on the same street, one John Brown and the other James Brown, and a customer comes along intending to buy of James Brown, John Brown, if he knows that, is violating James Brown's legal rights if he waits on that customer. This is the principle that runs throughout all the cases of substitution, which the law usually calls "unfair competition."

What did the wholesaler referred to in the above letter have a legal right to do when he decided not to sell the brands he had been selling? Of course he had a legal right to throw them out, and he had an equal right to notify the trade that he had done so. Perhaps he also had a right to tell the trade that he had thrown them out because he considered the new brand better, but this would be pretty close to the line of illegality if it could be proven that his reason was quite different and that the new brand was in fact not better.

After he had thrown the old brands out he had a right to do everything he could, that was honest and fair, to switch to the substitute brands all the customers who had been buying the old brands. The law would let him go pretty far, too, in an argument that the substitute brands were better. But he has no right whatever to palm off on customers different goods than they ordered, and different goods than they expected to get, without first telling them that he is going to. He is compelled under the law to disclose to customers in the fullest possible way, at the time of sale, that what he is giving them is not what they ordered. It is not sufficient to send them a substitute brand and put it up to them when they receive it whether they will take it or not. Very often under such circumstances they will have to take it. The fact that they choose to take the substitute brand, knowing it to be a substitute, does not make the transaction legal. It is still unfair competition and can be enjoined. Take a retailer in western Pennsylvania who has ordered a certain brand of something from a New York house. He needs the stock and is waiting for it. When it comes he finds that the jobber has sent him a substitute brand. He will almost certainly keep it, for he has no alternative. The jobber counts on that and takes advantage of it. He cannot do so legally. Almost any court would call that unfair competition and issue an injunction against it.

I ought to add that in his arguments for the substitute brand, a seller must not slander the old brand or reflect upon its q any unfair way. If it is r as good as the substitute b can say so, and give that a son why he is selling the su But he is treading on thin i order to make the sale, nounces its quality inferior is not. There is always less latitude for difference ion as to the quality and de of merchandise, but this ha and any seller who, in o avoid selling one article or to sell another goes beyo limit, may find himself d in a lawsuit brought by th facturer whose goods he flected upon.

My answer to the Bosto spondent is that his for tomer is practicing an ille of substitution or unfair tion, and if he has the evid can in all probability get a Sell Bananas by the Hand.—Handling bananas by the bunch is unprofitable, unhandy and unsightly. The better way, tell your buyer, is to buy them by the barrel in hands. The present cost for selected fruit is around 17 cents. These sell for 25, 30 and 35 cents a hand, according to size.

And people who want a dozen will buy a hand, thus preventing breaks and "odds," and incidentally increasing your sale.

Don't give the dozen price, but give the hand price, and don't show the outside of the hand, but the inside—the side that looks attractive.

It is very interesting to observe how easily and how quickly the public can be educated to buy goods your way. None of us sell dried beans or peas by the quart anymore, yet it all happened, you might say, in the past half dozen years. When we sell two pounds of beans to a person we do the accurate thing, we do the sane thing. When we sold a quart and forgot to stroke the measure we were handing over to the customer, on an average, one-fifth of a pound. Before you are much older you will be advertising eggs at so many pounds for 50 cents.

But to return to the banana idea.

You know, some women have what used to be known as the "penny purchase" habit—buying things i necessarily small way. Take A quart is called for, but t who is working along "edu lines will say, "Now, here's basket registered two-quart size will sell you for 12 cents." H have to say that many times woman gets the carrier basket

It applies to beets and car turnips, and it applies in still way to the king of all the veg potatoes.

People eat more stuff when t "more" to eat. Scrimpy buyin a scrimpy table.

For a week the past winter w our town up with peas at half price. What is the result? P to homes where such a veget figured for Sundays and holid Now they have the habit. The in dozens and hungered for mo

So we have the elimination "penny purchase" habit in o hands. Giving people at all t what they call for is rank s A salesman does not, as a gener earn his salary who is not a go gester. In fact, we would not c as a salesman.

Answer.—If the tenant moved in a house which he knew was going to be removed to another section of the lot, he would be held as having assumed the risk of damage, as there is always chance of damage in such an operation. Therefore the owner would not be liable unless he did the moving negligently. If he was careless about it and damage resulted from that carelessness he would be liable.

"Shererizing" a Retail Store.

No brief definition has yet been written for this new word. Many grocers have "Shererized" their stores and have merely thought of it as cleaning up.

Here is what the man who coined the word says about it: "To Shererize is to improve conditions, especially in grocery stores."

A Shererized store is one in which bulk groceries are stored in a compact, convenient and sanitary manner, protected from excessive evaporation, deterioration and damage, and displayed attractively and salably. In which economical relations as to time and distance traveled have been established between the goods and the sale. In which all questions of loss and waste of space—time—goods—clerk hire—store rent, etc., as related to the handling of bulk dry groceries have been settled profitably to the retail dealer.

John Mercer invented a process of treating cotton goods so that they presented a totally different appearance and John got into the dictionary under the heading "mercerize." When a man brings to pass a revolution in grocery stores he surely has equal title to a place in the big book.

Why shouldn't "Shererize" appear in Webster's?—Advt.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

Elizabethville, Pa., Mar. 2, 1916.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed you will find a sheet used in the advertising of a February sale.

I might add that this sale proved itself to be the most profitable one conducted in my sixteen years of business experience.

I would be pleased to have you pass your opinion as to the merits and demerits of this advertisement.

Yours truly,
A. M. ROMBERGER.

It is quite an easy thing to say that an advertisement which has produced results is a good advertisement. Not even an ad. critic can logically criticise a success. Mr. Romberger says, however, that it paid him better than any special sale he ever held before in his sixteen years' experience. That might not mean so much. I suppose you have heard of the bald-headed man who wrote the testimonial for the hair restorer. He said it had exactly doubled the amount of hair he had, which seemed phenomenal until it was discovered that he only had five hairs before. Mr. Romberger may or may not have had good luck with his special sales before.

This advertisement is a great big affair---19 x 25 inches, about the size of a large country newspaper page. Here is the much reduced reproduction of it:—

This is a pretty bad production from the printer's standpoint. It looks like the product of a badly equipped country office. Perhaps it isn't quite kind to criticise it—doubtless it is doing the best it can. Still I hate to see old-fashioned and modern type put together in this fashion. One thing I will say: the thing is plain and can easily be read, which is the most important factor after all.

The heading of this advertisement could have been much stronger. It seems to be really a cut-price sale, but the head entirely conceals that when it says: "Seasonable Goods at Reasonable Prices." I should have thought this advertisement would produce results. It offers a few things and offers them cheap. I should have given the regular retail value of the aluminum premium. Also, I should have made the matter under "Remember" at the bottom a little stronger. I should have written it perhaps like this:—

Remember:—

1. That all our goods are guaranteed to be exactly as advertised.
2. That in every case the prices given as regular value are the actual regular value, and in no case is a bargain overstated by one hair's breadth.
3. That you don't have to buy if you come here. Nobody will ask you to buy or look at you as if they thought you ought to buy. Look or buy, just as you like—you're just as welcome in one case as the other.

I think these points of the sale are stronger than Mr. Romberger's Points 2 and 3.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be taken up in strict rotation.

Offer No. 118.

We have on hand a brand-new Overland Auto Top and a second-hand Remington Standard No. 6 Typewriter that are of no use to us. We write to see if you can dispose of them for us. The auto top is in the best of condition, as we only used the bottom parts and used our own top from our other auto for the new running gears. If possible, we would like to get $50 for it. The typewriter is also in good working order and has not been used very long, but we have gotten a new one that has a few more up-to-date fixtures; $10.

Contributor Says Grocer Should Push Bread Instead of Flour

Grocers Neglect It, Though It Will Pay Seventy-eight Dollars a Year for Every Dollar Invested. Makes Strong Point of Pushing Goods That Bring Frequent Contact With Customers.

In the last issue some mention was made of a scheme of several of the large flour millers to advertise to housewives in a way which would inspire them to go back to baking their own bread. A sample advertisement which had been used in some of the monthly magazines was reproduced and commented upon.

Another scheme to produce precisely the opposite result, i. e., to induce retail grocers to push the sale of bakers' bread instead of flour, has been launched and emanates from Chicago. The argument in a nutshell is that bread is the grocer's most neglected line, yet pays more, considering the money invested, than almost anything else he can handle. From some of the matter sent us on the subject we reproduce the following:—

> The volume of business you can do depends entirely upon how often you can come in contact with your customers. Upon this Frequency of Contact with your customers also depends, to a large extent, the percentage of profit a merchant should make on each individual sale, as the turnover of stock is a factor that can never be lost sight of when the matter of profits is under consideration. The undertaker, for instance—who can only hope to do business with you once—must have a far greater profit than the furniture dealer who will see you once or twice a year, and he in turn must have a larger profit than the dry goods dealer, who sees you once or twice a month. You—in the grocery business—have an opportunity to meet your customers and make a sale to them daily, and if you cannot do this the fault is yours, not the customer's.
> All sorts of plans and schemes are used to attract possible buyers into the stores. Bargain sales, special attractions, cut prices on well-known advertised lines, anything to get the people in and give the salesforce a chance. Even though they fail to buy the article they came for, there is always a prospect for selling them something else when they are once inside the door, the great problem is to get them inside.
> A grocer will place a sign in his window offering sugar below cost. A staple like sugar. Why? Just to induce a possible buyer to come inside. He is willing to take a loss on the sugar in order that he or his clerks may have a chance to sell tea, coffee, fruit, vegetables, canned goods or any one of the thousand and one articles he handles. And still the average family only buys sugar approximately sixteen times a year. Think this over. It's worth considering. There are approximately 300 business days in the year. Approximately sixteen times a year each family will want sugar. On this basis only about five out of every hundred people who pass your store will be in the market for sugar, and only a very small number in addition to this can be induced to buy because your price is a low one. Does that look like good merchandising?
> Consider flour as a means of drawing trade. You sometimes cut on that to attract attention. About once every month flour is purchased by the housewife who bakes her own bread. Twelve times a year she comes to you for flour, and you make a mighty small profit on the sack you sell her. Figure the actual percentage you make on that sale some time, then take the time to figure your loss from damage done by rats and mice, torn sacks, large space necessary for storing, trouble in handling, and then take a good laugh. You will wonder why you have devoted so much of your time and efforts to the sale of flour. You will realize that taken all in all your profits on flour dwindle down to the fine point of nothing. All this to come in contact with the housewife twelve times a year, and during all the time you encourage her to keep up home baking.
> You have in stock one line of goods on which you have absolutely no loss. A line on which you make an attractive profit. You never have to cut prices on this line, and through it you come in contact with every one of your customers daily—312 times a year—and that line is bread.
> Only 50 per cent. of the bread consumed is sold over the counter, the balance is baked at home, or sold by bread peddlers, and you have encouraged this practice, and continue to encourage it, against your own best interests and directly opposed to the principles of good merchandising.
> What an opportunity is offered you and your clerks each day when a customer comes to you for bread to sell them something else in addition to the "staff of life" she came for. Bread is more than a "staff of life" for you. It is the greatest opportunity any merchant can possibly possess. What do you think the department store would give for a line that would bring every one of its customers to it daily?
> A careful investigation in more than fifty cities of the United States and Canada developed the startling fact that the most neglected line the grocer handles is bread, the very line that offers him the greatest opportunities from a merchandising and profit paying standpoint. Bread, on which he only makes 1 cent a loaf. A paltry 25 cents on each $1.25 sold, but which at the end of the year yields to him a profit of $78 on each dollar invested, is looked upon with contempt by the majority of grocers, and during all the time it can be made the most important line carried.
> In the mind of the average grocer in your mind, perhaps—bread is just bread. Any old bread is good enough. You wish that you did not have to handle it, but you feel that you have to. You do not use the same discriminating care in the selection of the bread you sell that you use in the selection of the teas or coffees, flour and canned goods, or any other of the numerous lines you handle. You do not feel that you have to. Your attitude toward the bread business and your utter indifference and carelessness as regards its fitness and quality, frequently drives the housewife who is disposed to purchase bread from you back to home baking or the peddler, when it is decidedly in your interest to induce her to give up either of these practices. More Successful Co-operative Deli Systems

At Ann Arbor (Mich.) and Marengo (Ill.), the Latter a Town, All Lines of Retailers Have Greatly Re Their Delivery Cost by Co-operation.

Continuing the subject of co-operative delivery, touched on last week with reference to Champaign and Urbana, Ind., the retail merchants of Ann Arbor, Mich., started a consolidated delivery system in 1907, with meager cash capital and a burden of debt. Its central station cost nearly $8,000 and its two lots $6,400. These are now paid for and free from debt. Its payroll amounts to more than $13,000 a year and its annual feeding bill is about $2,500, while it pays out more than $600 a year for horseshoeing. It is interesting to note that one of the smallest items in the annual budget is that of claims awarded on account of broken, damaged or lost goods; this amounts to about $120 a year. The loss from this form of leakage under the old individual system was far greater than this—undoubtedly several times this amount.

When this system was started the twenty-two charter shareholders were using seventy-six delivery rigs. Now the work is done with twenty wagons and twenty-two horses. One of the most interesting features of the Ann Arbor Merchants' Delivery Co. is the fact that it is building an increasing business in distributing goods to the merchants as well as to their customers. Jobbers having occasion to send regular shipments of package goods to the merchants find this a cheap and convenient way of handling their trade. A wholesaler c dies, for example, makes a r weekly delivery to some merchants. By using the mer own system the whole lot is s to the central station, opene then the allotment to each m is delivered in the course of calls at the stores. This co candy jobber only 10 cents livery, or about $2 for a shipment. The fact that thi of business can be done with s ly any additional expense m desirable for the company, w saves the jobbers a large perc of local distribution expense.

The use of delivery coupo been found to be a great co ence at Ann Arbor. These c are in the form of tags and ar for in cash by the merchant buy them in large quantities eral hundred at a time. In ca C. O. D. delivery the tag is form of an envelope, into the driver puts the money col These deliveries are increasi volume: it is a light day wh company does not make two dred of them, and as high as hundred and forty-five C.

grocery stores and two arkets are the only direct ers of the system, which is d by two drivers and two . The wagons are of the type, having separate com- nts for oil and gasoline. They make four deliveries a day—eight o'clock and ten in the forenoon, and two and four in the afternoon. The only criticism made of the system by any merchant is that some of the stores sometimes delay the wagons a little and prevent them from starting on schedule time.

The only distinctive point of difference between this system and that suited to towns and cities of a considerably larger size is the fact that no central station for the redistribution and routing of merchandise is necessary. This, of course, implies a large proportionate saving of expense and avoidance of investment. Just how large a town may be successfully served without a central station is a problem that is to some extent determined by the situation of the stores and other local conditions. There seems to be a reasonable basis for the belief that a town of 3,000 or 4,000 inhabitants, and possibly of 5,000, may be successfully served without a central station, provided the stores are comparatively near together.

Each Marengo merchant pays for his delivery service in strict proportion to the volume of his deliveries. Drivers are not permitted to solicit business or to collect bills for merchants. The delivery company is held strictly accountable for breakage and loss of articles intrusted to it for delivery, and the merchants hold a reasonable deposit of cash to cover claims of this character. There is apparently no reason why a fair amount of subsidiary business from merchants in other lines and from private individuals may not be secured by the consolidated delivery company in the small town as well as in the larger one.

The extent to which the principle of co-operative deliveries may be applied in the cities and villages of the United States is suggested by the fact that, according to the last census report, there are 1,172 cities of 2,500 to 5,000 inhabitants; 629 cities with a population of 5,000 to 10,000; 372 cities containing 10,000 to 25,000 inhabitants, and 11,784 incorporated towns of less than 2,500 inhabitants. In round numbers, then, there are 14,000 incorporated towns and cities in this country in which a co-operative delivery system, if sensibly organized and administered, would be safely practicable and would probably work out a decided economy for the merchants in those places.

Is There Room?

I have been greatly interested from time to time, in seeing the beginning and the end of numerous small businesses. For example, while riding on a trolley car I would pass a vacant store property, so often that its sightless eyes became familiar. One day I would note signs of coming occupancy, and a little later a sign would appear in the window that on a certain day the store would be occupied by a new enterprise. Sometimes it would be a grocery store, sometimes a delicatessen, sometimes a candy store, and sometimes something else. I am fond of speculating over the founders of these little enterprises, the high hopes with which they were being launched, the source of their capital and so on.

The little store would open, usually with everything new and spick and span, and I could see the proprietor, or his wife, or the clerks, standing inside from time to time as I passed, ready and waiting for the customers who sometimes came, but oftener, perhaps, did not. Then one day as I passed —this has happened so many times —the place would be closed again. Sometimes there would be a constable's or sheriff's bill in the window. The little enterprise, started in such high hope and spirit, had gone down to defeat. Its money was gone and who knows what prospects shattered.

As I say, I have had this happen under my eyes a great many times. It has happened so often that when I see one of these small neighborhood stores open now, I begin to look forward from the very first day to the day when I shall pass there and see it closed again. I have reached a conclusion as to why this thing occurs so often. I don't believe that one of these people out of ten sits down before he opens a store and debates with himself—or better still, with somebody else—whether there is any real need for the store he is proposing to open. If he did, and acted on the conclusion he would draw, nine out of ten of these stores would not be opened at all. I believe the opening of a new store to be about the loosest thing a man does, considering its importance. He wants to go in business for himself. He looks about and sees a vacant place and he opens a store. Where is his trade to come from? Aren't there enough stores in the neighborhood now? He usually doesn't think of those things. "I'll have as good a chance as the others," he says, if he does think of them, forgetting that even if he gets his share, it won't be a living share if there was just enough business to go round before.

But somebody says, if you want to stand on that, nobody would ever go into business. In very many cases this is true. Why should they if there isn't room for them?

Pure Jackassism.

Messrs. R. H. Macy & Co., New York department storekeepers, had a rug sale and cut the price of Whittall rugs, which are a well known brand of rug sold generally at $50. The Macy price was $44.74. In the sale were other rugs which were not sold as Whittalls, and which were also reduced. The American Fair Trade League has complained to the Federal Trade Commission that this is unfair competition under the recent Federal law.

The theory on which the complaint is based is one of the most remarkable I have ever heard. The man who conceived it is d. f. or a genius, for the I am unable to decide whic argument appears to be thi selected a well known arti cut the price. By that he to attract people to his st to sell them either rugs whi not Whittalls, or entirely merchandise. Therefore th tall rug cut was a bait, whole thing unfair competi

At least I suppose that argument; I cannot figu thing else out of it. Is it markable? There is no cha Macy used the Whittall ru fraudulently sell other Whittalls. In fact the Whi admit that nothing like t done. He simply cut the pr well known article as an a to get people in the store, the League says is unfair tition!

As I have been writing, viction has been taking sh the author of that argum not a genius. Will the Trade Commission take an of such arrant nonsense? wait and see. It seems that this fool League ha mad.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The agreement between F. H. Fromm and Thomas Roberts & Co., under which their foreign and domestic fish department has been conducted since September 15, 1913, has terminated, and that branch of the Roberts business will be discontinued. Mr. Fromm takes over all accounts, merchandise stocks, etc., resuming business as importers and brokers, under the style of F. H. Fromm & Co., No. 8 South Front street.

The Philadelphia Auxiliary of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association has sent to every wholesale grocer in the Philadelphia territory a most valuable pamphlet, which is really a reference book of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association and its local auxiliary and all that both organizations are constantly doing for the trade. The book contains a reprint of the objects of the Philadelphia Auxiliary, a copy of the distributor's agreement, names of the officers and directors of the local auxiliary, together with all the committees and a full list of the members. There is also a list of the officers of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association and of the members, together with the names of the local agents. The book is complete and should be very valuable.

If This Case Succeeds There Will Be No More Cut Prices of Trademarked Goods

American Fair Trade League Files Complaint Against New York Department Store With Federal Trade Commission Charging Unfair Competition. Department Store Cut Price on Well-known Rug and League Says There Was a Bait.

An interesting question is involved in a complaint which the American Fair Trade League, composed of manufacturers of trademarked goods, has filed against R. H. Macy & Co., New York department storekeepers, with the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, the charge being unfair competition. The League says that Macy & Co. advertised the well known Whittall rug at a cut price and that was evidence of its desire to deceive the public. The unique theory on which this was based is best told by the following extracts from the formal complaint:—

> The American Fair Trade League herewith submits to your honorable Board a certain printed sheet of exhibits "A" and "B," with explanatory comment, as typical evidence of unfair methods of competition commonly used by a corporation conducting a retail dry goods and general merchandise business in the city of New York under the name of R. H. Macy & Co. We ask that this sheet be made a part of the record in this case.
> The exhibits are fac-simile reproductions of original clippings in our possession of advertisements appearing in the New York "World" and New York "Herald," two newspapers published in the city of New York, having a large circulation in the States of New Jersey and Connecticut, and, to some extent, in every State of the Union. Trade authorities have estimated that, under normal conditions, at least one-fourth of the sales of large New York City retail merchants are made to residents of neighboring States, either in person or by mail. Evidence of the existence of an important volume of interstate commerce of this character is furnished by the constant purchase by New York merchants of large advertising space in the daily newspapers in States contiguous to the State of New York. The advertiser against whom this complaint is filed maintains its own delivery service in portions of the adjoining States of New Jersey and Connecticut, delivering merchandise daily to residents of those States, on order by mail, telephone or in person, and collecting on delivery, which constitutes in the aggregate a considerable volume of interstate commerce.
> Your attention is respectfully called to the great prominence with which low prices on Whittall's rugs are quoted in both exhibits. Whittall's rugs are a standard article and are widely advertised and are sold everywhere at uniform prices, known to all buyers and users of floor coverings. Exhibit "A": Whittall's name and Whittall's reputation are herein admittedly used to make it appear that all other goods sold by the advertiser are priced as low and on the same small margin of profit as the Whittall rugs. The language used is: "The saving on these rugs amounts to only about one-tenth. In many cases we save you a great deal more. Still, even at the rate of one-tenth saving, consider how much you will gain in a year by doing all your shopping at Macy's."
> In Exhibit "B" Whittall's name is even more definitely used to injure competitors. The language used is: "Whittall's Anglo-Persian Rugs, our price $44.74. $50 everywhere else. . . . This is about the average percentage by which we undersell our competitors. . . . And as with these rugs, so with everything in our world of merchandise."
> All other items listed and quoted in Exhibit "B" are anonymous goods, the titles of which furnish no indication either of quality or of source. It is a significant admission of the drawing power of Whittall's name and of the motive of this advertiser that a 10 per cent. cut in Whittall's rugs should be more prominently featured than the alleged 33 per cent. and 50 per cent. cuts on the nameless merchandise.
> We respectfully submit that the language of these advertisements conclusively proves that Whittall's name is used to deceive the public and to lure customers to buy, not the standard Whittall rugs, but the anonymous merchandise quoted at greater discounts from the alleged "regular" prices.
> We respectively submit that these advertisements are not an exceptional instance, but are typical of the general practice of this advertiser in the use of standard popular merchandise as "bargain bait."
> We respectively submit that the circulation of the newspapers in which these advertisements appeared covers many States and that this misleading use of Whittall's name injured not only every rug dealer where the advertisement was read, but every retailer of every kind of merchandise which this advertiser sells.
> We shall be glad to submit to your honorable Board further evidence in substantiation of the complaint herein made and we ask for a hearing hereon.
>
> Yours respectfully,
> AMERICAN FAIR TRADE LEAGUE,
> Edmond A. Whittier, Secretary.

Appended to the complaint is a statement by a representative of the Whittall Co. in which appears the following: "I think none of the shoppers were told a rug was a Whittall when it was not, but they came in looking for Whittall rugs and if they wished to know if it is not a Whittall, they had to inquire, when the usual reply was that it was just as good or better."

The "Interstate Agency and Exchange" Is the Latest Co-operative Buying Scheme

Emanates From Philadelphia and is Being Promoted by Firm of Investment Brokers. The Scheme Told in an Unconvincing Letter. No Information Available on Many Vital Details.

Here is a brand new co-operative buying scheme. Up to the receipt of the following request for information we had not heard of it:—

> Arcola, Pa., April 18, 1916.
> To the Editor.
> Dear Sir:—I herewith inclose a letter from Lindes & Co., which should be of great advantage to merchants, at $2 for life membership. What is your opinion of this and do you think it is O. K.?
> Yours truly,
> I. P. WILLIAMS.

Neither of the concerns named in the above letter which this correspondent sends, "De Armond Lindes & Co., investment brokers, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia," who are promoting the scheme, or the "Interstate Agency and Exchange," which is the scheme itself, appears in the Bradstreet Commercial Rating Book, or in any Philadelphia directory. This is not necessarily evidence that the scheme is spurious, because in the first place it may be new, and in the second place the commercial agencies do not like to rate investment brokers and promotion schemes.

The letter which explains the scheme is herewith reproduced:—

> DE ARMOND LINDES & CO.,
> INVESTMENT BROKERS,
> Witherspoon Building,

American Fair Trade League, in Order to Serve Stevens Bill Campaign, Sues Head of National Trade Association. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, April 21, 1916.

The latest effort of the American Fair Trade League to antagonize those who disagreed with its attitude on the Stevens bill, has taken the form of a suit for $50,000 damages brought in the Supreme Court by Dr. Lee Galloway, vice-president of the American Fair Trade League, against George B. Caldwell, president of the Sperry & Hutchinson Green Trading Stamp Co. Mr. Caldwell is president of the recently organized National Trade Association which is opposing the passage of the Stevens bill, and the fight is really between the two organizations. The Stevens bill, if it passes Congress, will give the manufacturer of trade-marked products the right to fix the price at which the wholesaler and retailer must sell his goods.

The suit brought by Dr. Galloway is considered extremely trifling by most persons who have been informed of it. The American Fair Trade League, in order to obtain information with which to fight premiums and advance the interests of the Stevens bill, sent out all over the country a list of blank questions as to trading stamps—whether they had been used, with what effect and so on. This was sent out in the guise of an independent, impartial inquiry, but it was really an attack under cover, upon trading stamps and premiums. A copy of the questions was published in this correspondence several weeks ago.

Some time ago President Caldwell, of the Sperry & Hutchinson Co., sent several of these blanks filled out to Dr. Galloway with the statement that the merchants who had filled them out had sent them to the Sperry & Hutchinson Co., evidently because they desired that company to know the character of their replies. Dr. Galloway claims to have investigated these blanks and to have found that the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. had them printed, and upon that he bases his suit for $50,000 damages. The suit is, of course, not by Dr. Galloway, except by name. It is a move of the American Fair Trade League to weaken the rapidly growing opposition to its pet bill, the Stevens bill.

The American Can Co. during the week has announced a rather large advance on packers' cans, which gives color to the claim of the packers that it is going to cost them more to pack this year than almost ever before. No. 1 cans are advanced $1.10 per thousand; No. 2s, $1.50; No. 2½s, $2.25; No. 3s, 5-inch cans, $2.25; No. 10s, $4.50.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Tea quiet on account of holiday week. Prices unchanged.—Coffee futures first weaker and then higher on account of duty talk. Actual coffee unchanged; fair demand.—Sugar firm and advancing about 10 points in both raw and refined during the week.—Tomatoes 5 cents per dozen higher during the week on account of revived demand. All other canned goods unchanged.—Domestic sardines scarce and high, packers asking same price on new pack as on spot.—Prunes unsettled, uneasy and tending higher on account of refusal by coast packers to sell futures. Short crop prospects at bottom of the situation; demand fair. Apricots, peaches and other dried fruits unchanged and quiet.—Wheat unsettled, but closes week at advance.—Flour about 20 cents per barrel lower than a week ago; demand light.

How a Manufacturer Can Insure the Grocer a Living Profit

New York Contributor Says it is by Refusing to Grant Price Concessions to Cutters. Over Eighty Per Cent. of Grocery Business is in Hands of Regular Grocers, and Less Than Twenty Per Cent. in Hands of Chain and Economy Stores. The Majority Should be Protected.

Until recently the main problems before the retail grocer were:—

(a) How to run his store on the basis of equal prices with the rest of the grocery trade and make it more attractive through better service which would draw the desired patronage; or

(b) How to sell a greater volume of the trade staples, which make up the bulk of the grocery business, at somewhat lower prices than his competitors, yet with a profit obtained through a better organization of his business, or the greater volume of turn-over as against a lower cost of doing business on staples of large volume; or

(c) How to combine the above two elements efficiently and successfully; that is, to sell standard trade-marked advertised goods at the standard advertised prices which returned a fair profit and combine with them a larger volume of staples on a basis attractive to the consumer and profitable to the retailer.

Whenever the retailer cut the prices of standardized advertised grocery specialties below a point which showed a fair return for retailing service, such a cut in these trade-marked goods must be offset by enough advance on unbranded staples, of less known value, to maintain the average gross profit necessary for the store to show a new profit on total volume, and that principle still holds good.

Within the last few years, however, the retail grocery trade, especially in this section, has seen the growth and expansion of a new character of irregular retailer or retailing wholesaler, giving at his stores less service than the regular retailer, combined with lower selling prices to the consumer, which he is able to do chiefly because of combination facilities for buying in wholesale quantities, or concessions from manufacturers of trade-marked merchandise exacted on account of superior buying and distributing facilities.

The manufacturer who undertakes to market in a large way a grocery specialty, with the aid of the regular retail grocer, is confronted to-day with these basic problems:—

(a) To make the specialty attractive to the retailer it must bear a sufficient profit to make the net margin attractive in comparison with other competing brands or unbranded goods.

(b) It must be sufficiently advertised to the consumer to create a market which the retailer may take advantage of, by his co-operation through selling it to his trade without such cost, through time and effort on his part, as will make it unprofitable.

(c) It must be of such value to the consumer at the price asked, in comparison with competing products on the market, as will get a hold on permanent consumer patronage through service rendered.

Hence, you will see that the problem of the manufacturer putting out a trade-marked grocery specialty gets down in the last analysis to be the same as that of the retail grocer, namely:—

Success must be built upon superior service rendered or it is built upon the sands, which the adverse winds may blow down.

The manufacturers of trade-marked grocery specialties as a rule, because of the facts above stated, in making their retail or standard selling prices on their specialties do allow for a profitable margin to the retailer as a matter of good business, or even of business necessity in marketing their products. On the other hand, having in mind that they must meet the competition of other manufacturers of similar articles, they recognize that there is a point at which it would not be in the interest either of the retailer or of themselves to extend the retailing profit margin, because it is kept in mind that in the last analysis the goods must be of superior value to the consumer else the turn-over would not be there for the retailer nor the business be established for the manufacturer, and both retailer and manufacturer are better off in selling $10 worth of a specialty on a 25 per cent. gross margin, let us say, within a single month, than if they sell $5 worth of the specialty under normal conditions at a profit margin of 30 per cent.; in one case the gross profit would be $2.50, in the second case, though larger per item, the gross profit total would be only $1.50, and the relation of profit to turn-over must always be taken into consideration.

Assuming, therefore, that the profit margins allowed the retail grocer by the leading manufacturers of grocery trade-marked specialties are fair and right, as a rule, and made with due relation not only to the retailer's cost of doing business, but also to turn-overs, you well know that when a grocer, who gives equal service, makes lower prices on price standardized trade-marked goods, he is either selling them at less than a fair profit, in which case he must make it up on other goods of less known value, or he has organized his business on a more economical basis than his competitor and the price which he makes will soon become the standard price for these goods on the basis of what the service is worth—which condition his competitor must meet if he is to hold the business—or else, the price-cutter is enjoying a concession, quantity or otherwise, in the purchase of the goods, which enables him to undersell his competitor in retailing at a profit—a special privilege contrary to all ideas of fairness in marketing and to the American principles of business.

The elements of service given to the consumer by the retailer are all worth something to the consumer and are recognized as being of value, which the majority of consumers have always paid for and will always be willing to pay for.

Therefore, it is not to the interest of the regular grocery trade, or of the consumer, much less of the manufacturer of a trade-marked article, who expects to build his business on good will and value, that an irregular form of retailer, obtaining wholesale buying concessions, should combine these concessions with a saving in service to the consumer to the end that the value of standard merchandising should be destroyed under regular and normal conditions of merchandising.

It is only natural that if a woman finds prices higher in one store than in another, on the same brand of goods, the average woman will think only of the price and not of the often wide difference in service performed.

This is not a good thing for the manufacturer who expects to do business with the service grocer, because it destroys the value of his article in most of the s which he expects to get l ness. It is not a good thin regular retailer who must g ice, because it destroys the his service in the public mi

To permit standardize marked merchandise to b cut prices by the irregular is to invite a lack of confi the quality of the goods part of the public.

More than 80 per cent. grocery business of this c still in the hands of the re tailer, and he has no reaso the large organizations stores, department stores like, if these concerns do trade privileges which are tended to the individual because if the large de store or chain store org had to do business on the the same overhead cost as able to do it on, they wo go out of business. The o that enables these irregula izations to go forward as now doing is concessions fr ufacturers of trade-marke that enable a lower selling such organizations on sta merchandise to draw tra those who cannot afford these prices on the basis of which they get and th which they give.

Retailers representing th and legitimate grocery trad day in the large majo whether you remain so or pends upon your own abilit the condition which confro namely, to require of the turer a fair policy in deal you, and certainly it is no u a fair requirement that, i ates a market for his pro the consumer and expect handle it, he ought to prot selling it at a fair profit, permit others of his sales resented by irregular reta tablishments, to undersell to undermine the good will trade, as well as his own.

¶ We believe we can find, on the list of Harisco Standardized Coffees, the best Coffee that a grocer can find anywhere to sell at a given price and leave a fair profit.

¶ Say he wants a standard staple Coffee to sell at 25 cents, or 35 cents, or some other price.

¶ Of course he can get at a hundred places Coffees to sell at those prices, but after he has them established will they remain uniform? They will not, unless they are Harisco Standardized Coffees, for nobody else in the whole Coffee field uses the method that we use to keep our Standardized line uniform.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the past week. There is a decided scarcity of low and medium grade teas in this country and the market is in consequence down pretty close to hard pan. Everything in these grades of tea is steady to firm without any possibility of getting concessions from the list on anything good. The demand is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows no practical change so far as actual coffees are concerned. The German situation, which has depressed most stocks, has also depressed coffee options, but this has not affected actual coffees, and prices are about the same on all grades of Rio and Santos as they were a week ago. The statistical position of Brazil coffees is strong, and many believe that if it were not for the depressing influence of the war prices would go higher. In fact it is hard to see how they are not a safe purchase even now. Milds are firm and unchanged in price. Java and Mocha quiet with Javas very scarce and firm.

Sugar.

The sugar market is about 10 points higher than it was a week ago, both as to raw and refined. The scarcity of raw sugar has pushed the market up again, and the highest quotation now heard is 6.27. Already the season in Cuba has begun to wane. Refined sugar has also advanced and granulated now ranges from 7.25 to 7.30. Consumptive demand for sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week and sweets generally are taking a back seat. Compound syrup is dull and unchanged. Sugar syrup still very high but quiet. Molasses unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

No change has occurred in mackerel, although some holders seem to think that there is a slight tendency towards lower prices. If so it is not very material. The market is dull and very high. No new shore mackerel will be available before May or June, and no new Norwegian mackerel, if any come at all before August. Cod, hake and haddock are dull and unchanged, the supply being very low. Salmon is active, but shows no change in price. Domestic sardines are unchanged and very high. The new pack will begin in a week or two, and prices will probably for a while be no lower than for spots. Imported sardines still very scarce and very high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are high by reason of a better demand which struck several markets simultaneously. The market is 2½ to 5 cents per dozen higher on Maryland 3s. The statistical condition of tomatoes is still very strong. Corn and peas, both spot and future, are unchanged. Apples dull and weak. California canned goods show no change and in quiet demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods dull and at ruling quotations.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are exactly where they were a week ago. Demand is fair. Marrows are also about where they were; perhaps a shade higher than a week ago. California limas and Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The receipts of butter are commencing to increase, and the consumptive demand is very good. The receipts are cleaned up on arrival, but a further increase in production is likely, and a slight decline is probable as the season advances.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged. Receipts of eggs are increasing and large quantities are now going into cold storage. The quality continues to be the best of the year. No change seems likely as long as the storage demand continues.

Cheese.

The market for old cheese is fair at unchanged prices, with a normal consumptive demand. New cheese is commencing to arrive, but the quality is only fair. New stock is meeting with a ready sale at 1 to 2 cents under the price of old cheese. The make will increase and new cheese will probably decline in the near future, while fancy old bids fair to be maintained.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are still working up and show a slight advance for the week. The demand is fair. Packers are refusing to quote futures, because they have been unable to contract with growers at anything like a favorable price. If this is due to the likelihood of short crop, the high prices which have resulted from it will probably be maintained for some time. If it is due to a squeeze on the part of the growers, it may or may not peter out shortly. The demand for prunes is fair. Apricots, peaches, raisins and currants are all dull and at unchanged prices.

Provisions.

Smoked meats of all cuts are steady and unchanged. There is a good Easter demand. Prices continue steady to firm and the light stocks will probably prevent any decline soon. Pure and compound lard are firm at unchanged prices. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are in moderate demand and at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Wheat.

The wheat market has been backing and filling this week without much net change. We expect to see the wheat market fluctuate within a very narrow range until after the Government report is issued in May, giving the area of winter wheat abandoned. At this juncture it is of interest to note the condition of wheat on April 1st in the large winter wheat States, as it will show in a striking way the very poor prospect this year as compared with last.

Area, 1915, 41,263,000 acres; 1916, 37,256,000 acres.

We must also be prepared for a short crop in Canada and our own Northwest, for the reasons discussed fully in our former letters, viz.: lack of fall plowing and lack of labor. With good weather this and next month it may be possible to partly overcome the present handicap.

So far as the flour buyer is concerned, we believe that the railroad situation is of far greater importance than crop conditions. There is every prospect of a severe clash between the trainmen and the railroads. The former seem to be determined upon obtaining their demands for shorter hours and higher pay and the railroads will face bankruptcy if the demands are granted unless they can secure from the Interstate Commerce Commission a further advance in freight rates. If arbitration fails and a strike results, there may be a complete demoralization of traffic resulting in a shortage of foodstuffs in the East.

It seems to us that it would be the part of wisdom for every flour buyer to check up his stock and lay i supply. Sometimes it is very e to defer buying flour in the getting it at the very lowest nic cents or 25 cents per barrel is a matter to consider when th prospect of running out and h means of replenishing. no improvement over last week, as trade remains very quiet, although merchants are offering stocks based on prices prior to the advance.

At New Orleans the clean rice market shows less sales made during the week at a further advance, while offerings of Blue Rose are becoming smaller every day. It is freely predicted that by the middle of May there will be very little Blue Rose left in millers' hands. Japans continue very strong and in good demand. Broken rices are almost unobtainable.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the mills are holding very strong at full list prices. The Millers' Association showed stocks on hand April 1st to be about 1,250,000 pockets, and with a 700,000 out-go during April (if the demand does not fall off during the last part), it will leave but 500,000 for the balance of the season. This condition seems to indicate extremely high prices for all grades by the first of June.

Spices.

The market has shown very little change during the week. April and May are usually the dullest months in the year in the spice line. With any unusual demand during late May or early June, the market is likely to react and higher prices are likely to prevail.

Pepper.—In fair demand at prices which are slightly easier. Cables, however, for far-off futures continue to quote high prices.

Cloves.—Somewhat firmer. Cables from London show an advance. The heavy consuming season will soon be on and higher prices are probable.

Pimento (Allspice).—There is an unusual demand for this article from England at present, which has had a tendency of keeping prices firm here.

Mace.—In fair demand at steady, but unchanged prices.

Nutmegs.—Are in large demand Nearly every offering made lately has been quickly taken up. The consumption, we believe, has increased. High prices are likely to remain in effect during the spring and summer.

Cassias.—China grades are slightly easier. This is due no doubt to the large importations just in on the steamer "Daylight." Batavias are scarce. Ceylon cinnamon is firm and in large export demand.

Gingers.—African is steady. Cochins are firmer. Jamaicas are steady and in fair supply at present.

Tapiocas.—Are in fair demand at firm, but unchanged prices.

Paprikas.—No special change to report. The better grades of Spanish are in small supply here. Prices in Spain are up one-half cent.

Imported Fish Specialties.

We regret that we cannot report a betterment in the imported sardine situation. A few fish are being taken, particularly in the north of Norway, but the prices paid for the catches, owing to the enormous demand, are so high that packers are unable to quote reasonable figures for the finished product, particularly in view of the fact that whatever is packed finds ready sale in the countries now at war. Besides, Scandinavian exchange has lately advanced about 10 per cent. above normal; in fact, rather more than that. Freight rates and insurance rates are higher than ever before. All in all, Norwegian sardines bought at present market level would calculate so high that they cannot find ready sale in the markets of the United States. This explains the exceedingly limited arrivals of Norwegian sardines.

From Portugal small lots of sardines are arriving here and there, and were it not for the fact that the demand and consumption are limited owing to the high prices now prevailing, there would be a marked scarcity of Portuguese sardines in this market.

The herring market remains unchanged. Newfoundland and Nova Scotia herrings have in many instances taken the place of the imported article, because it would be impossible to import Norwegian herrings at the present price level at which they are finding ready sale with Germany, Russia and Austria.

Our agents in Norway sent us a report of codfish caught up to date, and official statistics show the quantity caught this season to be a little more than half the quantity that was caught last season up to the same time. Only about one-third of the quantity prepared last season for roundfish was hung for drying this season, which fact is explained very easily. Dried fish will not be ready for export before June or July at the earliest, while the very same fish, if salted, is ready for export in a few weeks. There is such an enormous demand for the salted codfish from the countries now at war that it is only natural that the fishermen there prefer to prepare the salted codfish, which they can readily sell at enormous prices. From this can be seen that in view of the fact that last season's stocks of dried fish are entirely cleared, this coming season will bring us enormously high prices for all kinds of stockfish, even if the catch should be an exceptionally big one.

So says the Wm. B. Harris Co., of New York, the pioneer in standardizing coffees. Recently the city government of New York established standards in coffee and are now buying their coffees on the regulations set out by them. The city of Philadelphia is investigating these standards and most likely will adopt them. Mr. Harris, who is the U. S. Government coffee expert, assisted in drafting these standards for New York.

Time Limit Extended for Use of Serial Number Guarantee on Food and Drug Labels.

Labels of food and drug products containing the serial number guaranty issued under the Food and Drugs Act, which were printed prior to May 5, 1914, may be used until May 1, 1918, according to Food Inspection Decision 167, issued on Thursday last. This decision, which is signed by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Acting Secretary of Commerce, was issued after the U. S. Department of Agriculture had held a hearing on the subject and made an investigation of the number of labels bearing the serial number guaranty which remain unused in the hands of the various branches of the food and drug industries. It was found that manufacturers and dealers in food and drug products generally have removed the serial number guaranty from labels printed since the adoption of the amendment to the regulations for the enforcement of the Act of May 5, 1914, prohibiting their future use, but that some manufacturers have on hand large numbers of labels, costing thousands of dollars, printed in good faith under previous regulations authorizing the use of the guaranty legend and the serial number, which they have not been able to use in the time allowed by existing regulations.

American Canned Goods More Than Ever Wanted in Great Britain.

The trade in American canned fruits and meats was never as great in Edinburgh, Scotland, as it is since the war. Apples (in gallon cans), peaches, pears, apricots and pineapples of several grades sold in largely increased quantities. Beef and mutton sold freely, the business in six-pound cans being remarkable, although prices were high. Pork in six-pound cans was on the market for the first time and, according to a wholesale dealer, was very popular. Ox tongues were in steady demand, notwithstanding this article was an expensive luxury. An important trade in American peeled tomatoes was developed on account of scarcity of the Italian and French products. An excellent business was also done in tomato purée. Prices of all lines were much in advance of the preceding two or three years, owing to higher freight rates and advanced prices of tin and wood, but they were considered "good value," and wholesalers exp hope that the United States able to maintain ample supp year. A feature of the provis ness in Scotland was the disap of Dutch cheese, which found and more profitable market. cheese was offered in fair quan the first time in several years.

"Nationally advertised brands never pay a good profit." Not quite true, friend. Some such brands do not, nor do some unknown brands, especially when you have to cut them to move them.

The average nationally advertised brand pays—considering the work required to sell it—more profit than anything else.

You Ask for a Talking Point; Here It Is Salesmansnip must have intelligent talking points, or it doesn't get anywhere. When we ask you to take on Goldenoyle, you have a right to ask what there is about it that will make it sell better than other cooking and salad oils.

This is Goldenoyle's talking point:—It is the highest grade cooking and salad oil on the market; the richest and most velvety vegetable oil of this class your customer can buy. Did you read what Professor Allyn, the Westfield chemist, said about it?

We are oil refiners of twenty-five years' standing, and we know oil like a book.

Packed 4 doz., 7-oz. bottles; 2 doz. small cans, 21¾ oz. each; and 1 doz. ½-gal. cans. On 3-case order we prepay the freight. Beautiful recipe book for retailers' customers.

Some Wise Remarks on Advertising.

There's one bally thing I can't get through my nut, and it's this: that so many fellows who are kings when it comes to everything else about business, will let the thinnest schemes on earth be slipped over on 'em when it comes to advertising.

Ever notice that?

I don't put up any bluff at knowing much about advertising. I don't know it all. I don't even know 99 per cent. of it. Understand, I've done advertising, and I've tried to keep after it and watch it and get wise from it so as to know what to do next time. One thing I do know about it, if you ask me, and that's some of the things not to do.

It's a heap easier to know what not to do than it is to know what to do, ain't that right?

The other night up in Pennsylvania I was writing a postal in the post office when my eyes happened to light on something familiar. It was the name of an old customer—a fellow I'd left not an hour before—on a big advertising blotter on the desk. A number of the good-natured easy marks in the town had let some slick gent persuade 'em it was advertising to have their cards printed on this blotter and put in the post office.

Here was Sam's ad. I copied it word for word, except for the name. If I was to put Sam's name in this he'd cut the ears off me when I went in there again:—

SAMUEL R. JONES
Dealer in FINE GROCERIES
Best Quality Groceries and Provisions
WE STRIVE TO PLEASE

Some persuader, believe me! I can just see Sam's sidewalk all choked up with people plumb crazy to get him to strive to please. That sure is a great ad.

I had to go by Sam's again on the way to the station, and I dropped in a minute. He was there and I walked up and gave him a warm handshake. He looked a little foozled that he had to say good-bye all over again.

"Old man," I said, "I feel it's my duty to come in here and thank you. I have just enjoyed a big privilege, due to you, and I thank you from the bottom of my heart."

"How many saloons have you been in since you saw me?" he said, trying to sniff. I wouldn't have believed it of him.

"Nothing of that sort," I said. "I have just read that bully ad. of yours on the post office blotter, and it made such a hit with me that if I lived here, by heck, you could strive to please me all the time. Wouldn't think of letting anybody else do it! That's right!"

"This a joke?" said Sam.

"It wouldn't be for me, if I'd spent my money for that ad.," I said. "What did that cost you, Sam?"

"Five Dollars."

"Five dollars! Five dollars! Enough coin to buy a hundred nickel cigars. Great Jehosephat! I suppose the blotter wears out in about a week, too."

"Oh, they put a new blotter there six times a year," said Sam.

"I see. Six times nothing is nothing. Great idea all the way through."

"That advertising ain't any good, Sam," I said. "If you want to spend a five-spot why don't you get some circulars printed or put an ad. in your local paper? Five dollars for that!"

"Why a lot of people go in the post office," said Sam.

"Sure, but not to hunt up grocery stores," I said. "If a stranger went in who wanted to know where a good grocery store was he wouldn't look for any punk blotter—he'd ask the clerk at the window. Nope, there's nothing to it."

"I think it's all right advertising myself," said Sam, looking sort of bored, I thought.

"All right, if you feel that way about it there's another kind you ought to do along with it," I said, "and that's on fences out in the country somewhere. I'll tell you what I'd do—I'd drive th mare of yours say ten mi town until I come to a w push through the woods to about the middle of the darkest hole I coul tack up one of those blotte two months you can driv tack up a new one. Spain's Food Prices Now Feel War's Effects.

Food prices in Spain, though that country is not at war, are feeling the war's effect. A list of foodstuff prices compiled by the Seville consulate, Spain, shows that bread has risen 25 per cent. since August, 1914, domestic butter 142, imported butter 90, coffee 56, eggs 85, flour 80, codfish 100, sardines (largely tinned in this district) 40, lard 30, milk 36, bacon 50, ham 40, lamb 40, veal 40, beef 48, olive oil 14, tea 108, potatoes 100, cocoa 35, cheese 150, tomatoes 100, chickens 75, common salt 25, table salt 100, sugar 60, cabbages and other garden truck 60, rice 60, and fruits 100 per cent. Rents have advanced 15 to 20 per cent., fuel 150 per cent. Shoes that formerly cost $6 a pair are now $8; underwear has increased from $1.50 to $2 a suit, shirts correspondingly. All drugs and medical supplies have nearly doubled. The price of gas has been doubled, as has also the price of electricity for heating and lighting purposes. A comparison of the prices of foodstuffs in Seville, Spain, with those prevailing in the United States shows that they are over 200 per cent. higher. The articles taken for this comparison are bread, butter, coffee, eggs, flour, codfish, sardines, lard, milk, tea. cocoa, cheese, tomatoes, chicken and sugar. Imported tin goods such as fruits, vegetables, soups, jams, jellies and marmalades are quoted at prohibitive prices. A bottle of tomato catsup costs 85 cents, a tin of soup 75 cents, canned fruits 50 cents, jams, jellies, etc., 50 cents, crackers 50 cents per pound, baked beans 75 cents, lunch tongues 80 cents, sausages 70 cents per tin, salmon 40 cents, oysters 40 cents (ordinary 10-cent tins).

Doesn't This Appeal to You?

The Chase-O Mfg. Co., in order to create consumer demand for you, have contracted for several hundred billboards, together with painted walls and painted bulletins. Some of these are already in place and the balance will be gotten in shape as soon as possible. These represent permanent, attractive advertisements that are bound to influence many a woman to ask you for Chase-O Laundry Crystals. In addition to this there is a house-to-house demonstration going on that is sure to create sales for you. Chase-O, you know, is that laundry crystal that washes and blues at one time and is guaranteed to be harmless to the hands and goods.

A number of dealers have signified their intention to make the most of this Chase-O campaign by arranging for the effective window display the company is sending out. Every dealer can get behind and push Chase-O, because it pays a good profit and is a sure repeater. Your jobber will supply you.—Advt.

No. 360.—When Goods Sent You Are Not What You Ordered.

The point brought forward by the following letter is apt to arise almost any day in the experience of a buyer whose goods are shipped to him from a distance:—

Philadelphia, Pa.

Several weeks ago I bought a bill of goods from a New York house. I have dealt with these people for years, but they have just put a new salesman in this territory and he did not understand his line as well as the former man, and therefore got the order mixed up. The order was for early April shipment, and reached me last week. When I examined same I found that almost half were goods that I had not ordered and could not use. There were the same number of items, but only about half were right. I separated the right ones from the wrong, took the right ones and sent the others back, writing a letter to the firm and telling what I had done. They have refused to receive the items returned, on the ground that the order in which they appear is straight on its face, and the salesman is positive that the order as filled is correct. Will you please advise whether I did right in returning the goods which I did not order, and whether there is any doubt about my having to pay for the full order?

E. K. R.

This situation has often arisen, judging from the large number of cases on the subject, and the correspondent's status depends on the character of the goods, and whether what he bought can easily be separated from the rest. If they can, and he so separated them, my judgment is that he cannot be compelled to keep or pay for any more than he kept. Of course if the matter reaches the courts, he will have to prove very clearly that the goods which he rejected were not ordered. Did he keep a copy of his order, or the memorandum from which the order was made up? Every buyer ought to do that, but practically none but large buyers do.

When a seller of merchandise gets an order and fills it partly with ordered goods and partly with unordered goods, as was done in the above case, the buyer can reject the whole thing. It is not a good delivery, and he can insist that the order be sent complete or not at all. He is not obliged to do any separating whatever.

Or, he can hold out what he ordered, if he can clearly identify it, and return the balance. Of course, if it is the kind of goods sold in the mass, like barrels of sugar or so much grain, no identification of any part would be possible or needed. He could then hold out enough from the mass to cover what he ordered, and send the rest back. But sometimes he could not identify what he ordered, and in that case it must be all kept or all sent back. He cannot keep part. A case exactly in point has been decided within the last month by a Southern court. A buyer bought a job lot of hats, consisting of four dozen of all styles and values. The seller shipped about eight dozen instead of four. The buyer picked the four dozen that he liked and sent the rest back. The seller refused to receive them, sued for the whole eight dozen, and got a verdict. The court said it was not possible for the buyer to tell what hats would have been in the original job lot, and he had no right to go over the eight dozen and simply pick out the best. His duty, the court said, was to accept all or reject all because his own couldn't be identified.

There was another case decided recently—by a Western court. In that case the buyer ordered a specific lot of goods. After some delay, which was the buyer's fault, the seller shipped the exact goods covered by the order. The buyer opened the packages, kept some and returned the rest. Here, too, the seller refused to receive them and sued for the full order. He was given it, too, but on a somewhat different theory. Here there was no denial that the goods sent—all of them—were the goods ordered. The buyer attempted, after receiving the goods, to cut his order down without the seller's consent. This of course he could not do.

Here in a nutshell are t

Selling Soap Powder.—Here, madam, is a full-weight No. 4 package of washing powder for 15 cents. It's just as good for cleaning your best clothes as it is for mopping your dirtiest floor. It isn't a grainy powder like some and it isn't the kind that sinks in a lump to the bottom of the can. It dissolves quickly and is a great suds maker. It leaves one's hands clean and soft like, same as the best white soap does; it's more convenient than soap and far cheaper to use when you follow the directions you see printed here.

I have from the Kuhn Co. of Wilkinsburg, Pa., a sample of their mimeographed advertisement. Several months' ago I described this mimeographed plan of advertising that had been adopted by this company, and reproduced one of the letters or circulars with some comment on it. They are still keeping it up, so that I assume it has paid. The scheme is to typewrite what you want to say and then make as many copies of it as you need, on a duplicating machine like a multigraph or a mimeograph; very likely a mimeograph because a multigraph costs several hundred dollars. The result, if neatly done, looks like a typewritten letter, and makes exceedingly effective advertising, first because it is very cheaply produced, and second because it has a more personal look than ordinary printed advertising matter. It is a good idea, and enables a retailer to make all sorts of advertising experiments without running up big printing bills. Here is the reproduction which the Kuhn Co. send me this week:—

Genuine Michigan hand picked beans are very scarce this year and there is a lot of California beans now on the market, The appearance of these beans is good but they lack flavor and do not cook up well. We know this because we had one lot of them and had numerous complaints.

The Kuhn Co.

One thing I want to say to the Kuhn Co.: I shouldn't get too facetious in my advertising. It is exceedingly bad policy. Advertising should be written in earnest—never in jest. Of course it is all right to make a little gnip here and there, but it should always be incidental to the main purpose. I should never in the world make the whole thing facetious, as has been done in the Zap paragraph. My judgment is that that advertisement is almost enough to repel orders, rather than attract them. It is very bad indeed, I think. The Maltoid Biscuit paragraph is also somewhat objectionable for the same reason, though not as much so as the Zap paragraph. Better keep wit and humor out of advertising entirely. Nothing whatever should be put in an advertisement which would not be effective if spoken to the customer. Can you imagine selling any Zap if the proprietor or a clerk, when exploiting Zap to a customer in the store, should describe it as this advertisement does? Nine times out of ten the customer's face would get red and she would feel insulted. Forever after she would talk about the "freshness" of whoever was guilty of this sort of thing; and what is worse, she would stay away from the store. Be pleasant, conversational, even colloquial if you like, but never fresh, sarcastic or flip.

Anti-Trading Stamp Bill Killed in Mississippi.

The trading stamp taxing bill introduced in the Legislature of Mississippi recently was killed in the Senate after having passed the lower house. This bill was modeled after the Florida law and imposed a tax of $250 on stamp companies and merchants out the stamps. It was, there prohibitive measure in a sense word, although the tax wa smaller than that imposed by th ington law.

SAFE!

Every retailer in business is asked to sign specialty orders, and many of them often hesitate to do it.

There are so many schemes to cheat retailers that unfortunately they have grown reluctant to put their names to anything.

Apparently innocent signatures may turn up promissory notes, many an order in the hands of unscrupulous persons has turned up a while afterward far different from what it was when it started out.

All this is leading up to the remark that the retailer who signs a specialty order which bears one of the above stamps, doesn't run one chance in a thousand that anything will happen to it that he doesn't want to happen to it.

He is as safe with his name at the bottom of a stamped specialty order, as he is with his name at the bottom of a letter to his wife.

Safe in every possible way.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

VOL. LXI. PHILADELPHIA, May 1, 1916. No. 18

Ninety per cent. of the scheme salesmen who call on you are selling fakes or trash. Treating the ninety per cent. as the rule and the ten per cent. as the exceptions may save you some money.

Federal Food Officials Are in a Campaign to Clean Up Retail Grocery Stores.

The Argument of the Manufacturers Who Sell Chain Stores. An Editorial Article Called Out by a Subscriber's Letter.

What the Name "Heinz" on Food Products Means to You—Mr. Dealer.

First of all it means satisfied customers—on which you build up good will for your store. It means confidence—steady demand—reduced sales expense—and last, but not least—the quick turnover of capital, which is what makes your business show the most profit at the end of the year.

Are you cultivating this field of established confidence in a way that is bringing you all the business on the "57 Varieties" that should normally come to you, or is some other dealer getting it?

Ask our salesman for advertising helps that will link up the demand for Heinz products with your store.

More Return for the Money

¶ Wheatena will pay you better for the work done to sell it, than any other cereal on the market, bar none.

¶ The general experience is, you may have to sell the first package of Wheatena to some customers, but after that you can sit down and take it easy.

¶ Packed and guaranteed quite different from the average cereal.

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

What Do You Think of This Sign?

A friend of ours saw a cheering thing and reported it to us the other day. It was a sign in a retail grocery store reading as follows:

Notice to Salesmen

We do not give or sign specialty orders which do not bear the stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association or its kindred organizations. There will be no exception to this rule, so please spare our time.

R. G. BREED & CO.

This hung in a conspicuous place. We would like to see it hanging in retail stores everywhere. Not alone for our own sakes, please believe that, but for retail grocers' sakes. Just as we would advise them not to buy "solid" silver unless it had "sterling" on it, so we advise them not to sign specialty orders unless they have the stamp on--the stamp that guarantees honesty, promptness, fairness.

Selling the most popular merchandise one can get, provided it pays a fair return for the work involved—is the whole business of merchandising rolled into one sentence.

An article that sells itself, and that requires no wrapping or packing, should not be expected to carry as much profit as an article that has to be sold, or weighed, or wrapped, or tied. Think that over.

Selling Middlings (Cream of Wheat) Under Your Own Brand

Cream of Wheat Co. Opened Way for Effective Competition When It Said That Its Product Was Nothing But Middlings. Already Big Chain Store Concern Gets Its Own Brand of Middlings and Undersells Cream of Wheat Several Cents Per Package.

In the recent litigation between the Great A. & P. Tea Co. and the Cream of Wheat Co. the latter concern, defending itself from the charge of monopoly, said that Cream of Wheat was merely selected middlings and that its sales were only 1 per cent. of the whole. Therefore it could not be a monopoly. Of course the argument was good, and it disposed of the monopoly charge very effectively, but it did more: It gave a lot of people a hint to buy middlings and sell them the same as Cream of Wheat but at a greatly reduced price. Already the Great A. & P. Tea Co., which has nearly a thousand stores scattered over the country, has taken the cue and is selling under the name "Grandmother's Wheat Farina," a product which it states is identical with Cream of Wheat. It is exploiting this product by an attack upon the Cream of Wheat Co.'s methods, contained in the following notice, posted in all the stores:—

> For years we have been buying Cream of Wheat from the Cream of Wheat Co., selling it in our stores at a price that enabled us to make a satisfactory profit.
> The Cream of Wheat Co. took exception to the price for which we were selling it in our stores (12 cents) and would not do any further business with us direct.
> We have therefore decided to discontinue the sale of their merchandise and have placed on the market Grandmother's Wheat Farina, a product known as purified middlings.
> The Cream of Wheat Co. claim that Cream of Wheat is nothing else than purified middlings, of which they sell less than 1 per cent. of the entire output, and that anyone can buy the same product providing they are as careful in their selection as the Cream of Wheat Co. are in theirs.
> We have exercised every care in the selection of the purified middlings that we are selling under the name of Grandmother's Wheat Farina, and not a substitute, but as the very same thing which the Cream of Wheat Co. sell as Cream of Wheat.
> Our price is only 10 cents a package; the net contents is one pound and twelve ounces, and the same weight as Cream of Wheat.
> The reason why we can sell our products for 10 cents, while we sold Cream of Wheat for 12 cents (the manufacturers wanted us to sell it for 14 cents) is because the economy organization which we have developed enables us to sell goods at a smaller profit than any other grocer in the world.
> The money we save by our up-to-date organization we give to the consumer, and in this the Cream of Wheat Co. endeavored to prevent our doing in the sale of their product. We believe it is unreasonable that this company should require us to sell their goods at a higher price than we consider necessary.
> It is the duty of every housewife to give our Grandmother's Wheat Farina a fair trial, if for no other reason than to discourage the idea of manufacturers that they can control the retail price of their product.
> We guarantee that you will be pleased with Grandmother's Wheat Farina, that you will find it to be the equal of Cream of Wheat, and if you do not, bring the package back and we will gladly refund you the entire purchase money, no matter if you have used one-quarter or one-third of the product.

Of course retailers generally approve of the Cream of Wheat Co.'s action in cutting off a chain store concern that sold Cream of Wheat for 12 cents, but they would approve of it more if it would reduce its own exorbitant price so that they could make a profit when they sold it at the full price of 15 cents. Any retailer, now that he knows from the manufacturer himself that Cream of Wheat is nothing but middlings, can easily get his own brand and sell it to every customer who uses Cream of Wheat.

Unless Retailers Can Sell More Apples the Market Will Go to Pieces

The Government Finds That Supply on Hand in Storage is Nearly Fifty Per Cent. More Than Last Year. Wants Everybody to Push Sales. Retailers Said to Be Charging Too Much for Apples.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 28, 1916.

The condition of the apple market is a matter of grave concern to both growers and dealers all over the country. The report of cold storage holdings of apples on April 1st, recently issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, gives some figures which should cause all dealers interested in the crop to speed up the movement of this fruit in a most vigorous way. This report shows that on the first of the present month there were approximately 44 per cent. more apples in cold storage than at the same date one year ago, and the season of 1914-15 was one of unusually heavy production. Figures from 427 storages indicate that nearly 33 per cent. of the apples which were placed in cold storage by December 1, 1915, were still there on April 1st waiting to be consumed. As long as cold days continue a free movement of the fruit is more certain. However, let warm weather come to stay and apple sales are very likely to decrease rapidly.

Doubtless there are several reasons for the present conditions. The fact that the past season's commercial crop was considerably smaller than that of a year ago led to expectation on the part of growers and dealers alike, last fall, that the prospective market would be much stronger than has actually proven the case. As a result, much stock changed hands at values in excess of those which marketing conditions since show were warranted. This caused higher opening prices than in 1914 and naturally slowed up the movement. Neither growers nor dealers who held the fruit seemed inclined to push sales with the vigor that was displayed the previous year, when they had an enormous crop to market, and the result was that large quantities of apples were put into cold storage with the hope that the winter and spring markets would strengthen sufficiently to allow a margin of profit. In spite of the fact that last fall's commercial crop was estimated around ten million barrels short of the previous one, the amount placed in cold storage exceeded that stored in 1914 by about 13.5 per cent.

Pettijohn's Flour

A Modern, Scientific Flour for Use in Place of Graham

Pettijohn's Flour differs greatly from so-called whole-wheat flours. The white part, which forms 75 per cent., is ground separately. It is a very fine grade of patent flour.

The bran part, which forms 25 per cent., is specially prepared and added, largely in flake form.

The result is a delicate product and a scientific health flour, ready for use without further mixing.

Pettijohn's Flour is now advertised in all the women's leading magazines and is fast becoming a staple household product.

It is packed in large round 25c. tubes with removable cover—20 packages to the case.

We ask your co-operation particularly in filling customers' first orders. We will guarantee the sale on a trial case.

Federal Food Officials in Campaign to Clean Up Grocery Stores

Acting With State Food Officials. How Various States Approach the Problem. Competition by Different Colored Cleanliness Posters.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 28, 1916.

The Federal Food and Drug officials have embarked upon a campaign to raise the standard of cleanliness and sanitation in retail grocery stores. They are working in conjunction with the food officials of the various States. The theory is that the country store is both a collecting and distributing agency of foods. It sells foods of many kinds to the farmers and at the same time buys from them for shipment to the city butter, eggs, fruits, vegetables, poultry and other products of the farm. If the store is dirty and vermin inhabit the place, food products are certain to be more or less contaminated and likely to become dangerous to health. The reports from various State officials indicate that many stores have been found in the past to be in such a condition.

A clean, light, well ventilated store attracts customers, and the progressive merchant needs no other incentive to keep his floor, shelves and counter spotlessly clean, which includes screening from flies and the elimination of all other insects. Some storekeepers, however, seem to require prodding from food and health officials to induce them to maintain that degree of cleanliness which will insure that the food they handle will be free from contamination. Some of the States have very effective sanitary laws which require frequent inspection of all establishments where foodstuffs are put up, manufactured, or kept for sale. Other States depend upon the general provisions of pure food laws which require that foods shall be free from contamination. A few of the States lack either a law that will reach the unclean store nuisance, or means for enforcing the law.

State food and health officials have used various means to control effectively the sanitary condition of places where foodstuffs are sold. One of the most effective means that has been employed is that of securing the co-operation of women's clubs and civic organizations, the members of which are asked to personally influence grocers to keep their stores clean.

Competition in cleanliness has been secured in one State by means of colored placards which the food inspector gives the merchants who keep their stores in a sanitary condition. A store in excellent condition gets a large white placard, one in fine condition gets a blue placard, and one in good condition gets a card; the store that falls below the latter grading gets no card. The proprietors are permitted to keep the placards posted in a conspicuous place as long as the store is kept in the condition represented. There is keen competition among the merchants to get and keep the best placards. The buying public knows what the different colored placards signify and are particularly partial to the white placard stores. Other States have adopted a score card system similar to that used in grading dairies. The inspector scores each store where foodstuffs are sold according to certain points indicated on an inspection card. The scores are made public through the local press or by means of bulletins or circulars.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Pittsburgh Association admitted twenty new members at its last meeting on April 17th. The campaign still continues. The organization took action on many important trade matters. At the conclusion of the business session Mr. Smedley made an address. The Pittsburgh Association has elected three delegates to the national convention of retail grocers.

Any grocer who will take the time to analyze his stock and arrange it into groups, will soon be able to decide what lines it pays him best to push, and he will then be in a better position to make plans and devise ways and means whereby the sale of goods in those lines may be promoted.

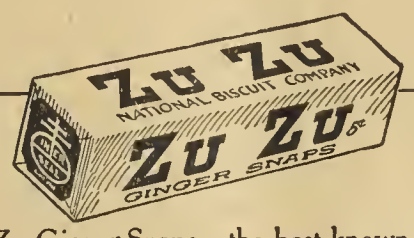
Appearance Counts

Every grocer should appreciate fully how much the appearance of things has to do with successful storekeeping.

National Biscuit Company products in the well-known In-er-seal Trade Mark packages and the attractive glass-front cans are a bright spot in any store.

They are profitable reminders—they remind customers to buy. National Biscuit Company products have established and maintained a quality that is unapproached in the baking of crackers, cookies, wafers, snaps, cakes and jumbles.

Make the appearance of things in your store a selling factor by stocking with a complete assortment of N. B. C. biscuit.



Zu Zu Ginger Snaps—the best known, largest selling, most widely distributed ginger snaps.

Keep in mind the turn over rather than the actual percentage of profit made on each individual sale, with the view of encouraging as much as possible the sale of goods that move fast.

Short Wheat Crop Predicted.

It seems fairly well assured, according to a special committee of the Chamber of Commeree of the United States, of which A. W. Douglas, of St. Louis, is chairman, that the winter wheat production this year will be appreciably less than that of 1915 and 1914. In fact, according to this prediction, it will be below the ten-year average of the decade 1906-1915, approximately one-third less than the harvest of 1915, or roughly speaking, around 450,000,000 bushels. The committee declared there was approximately at the time of its survey, April 8th of this year, 20 per cent. less acreage standing in wheat than at the same time last year. The question of what the price of wheat will be during the next six months is one which will have a profound effect on the business of the country. The committee's forecast, at least for the spring and summer, is for comparatively high prices in wheat, since at the time of observation there did not seem to be any likelihood of the corn approaching the yield of last year. This estimate is based on a continuation of European hostilities. Should peace come, however, and the Dardanelles be opened, releasing what is generally thought to be the accumulated surplus of wheat in Russia, there would undoubtedly be a decline in priee. What this deeline would be, the committee says, can only be a matter of conjecture.

Men With Sales Ability

We have a few desirable openings for men of this type to call on Grocers in connection with Star Egg Carriers and Trays. Sixty-three per cent. of the grocers of the country are already using Star Equipment. To men with proven selling ability we can offer an exceedingly interesting proposition.

WITH THE EDITOR

Selling the Chain Stores.

The following letter, which has also been answered by mail, is worthy of the highest consideration:—

———, N. Y., April 24, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am anxious to learn what manufacturers are really trying to protect the legitimate grocer in his fight with the chain store type. For example, the Royal Baking Powder people sell to the cut rate stores so that they retail at 39 cents, and in some cases as low as 36 cents, per pound. I have bought right here in my own town Blue Label Ketchup at 11 cents for the 15-cent size, the regular jobber's price to me. You can readily see what chance a small grocer has at meeting such prices. I understand that there are manufacturers who are trying to protect the legitimate grocery trade by refusing to sell or allowing the jobber to sell to the cut rate stores. A list of these manufacturers at the best could not be long. Why not make an "Honor List" in your columns, to be added to from time to time? It would be of great service to us, I believe.

Yours truly,

NEW YORK SUBSCRIBER.

Almost all large manufacturers will to-day sell the chain stores on a quantity basis; that is to say, they will sell them in 100-case lots at a lower price than they will sell one or five cases. When complained to as to this preferential price, they say it is not a preferential price at all—they will sell the same quantity at the same price to any retailer who will buy.

Almost no large manufacturers refuse to sell the chain stores absolutely, and all of them, if complained to, use the same argument as to why they should not be asked to refuse. They say: "It is impossible to prevent a chain store concern from getting our goods if it starts out to do it. Somehow or somewhere it will get them, as universal experience has shown. Therefore our refusal to sell it would not keep the goods out. And furthermore, if we should refuse to sell a chain store, it is at once turned into an enemy. It will get our goods in a roundabout way and of course will always cut the price. Our business is demoralized to a very serious degree and we do not believe it is fair to ask us to endure this. We sell the chain stores practically because we have to."

I am free to confess that I see some force in this argument. A manufacturer who sells a chain store can often do considerable to keep that store from cutting prices, but if he has refused to sell it and it has gotten his goods in some other way as a revenge, of course he has no influence with it at all. Almost inevitably it will cut the price. The squabble between the Cream of Wheat Co. and the Great A. & P. Co., discussed elsewhere in this issue, is a timely illustration.

As to selling chain store concerns on condition that they hold the price, any manufacturer can legally do that, but they are hard to convince of it, and most of them are afraid to mix up with the monopoly laws.

In many cases one of these two plans would help:—

1—If a chain store is selling a proprietary brand at a cut price lower than you can sell it for, but which pays the chain store a satisfactory profit, it is at least partly because it is buying in quantity at a lower price than you buy. I should organize a co-operative buying exchange, if I could, for the purpose of getting as close to the chain store's buying basis as possible. Then you can come closer to meeting the chain store's selling price.

2—If a chain store is simply wantonly cutting the price of a proprietary brand, by selling it at a price which is not paying it a profit, and you find it impossible, under these circumstances, to get a profit on it, I should notify the manufacturer that I intended to throw his brand out at a certain time if he did not do what he could to stop the cutting. If he did nothing, I should throw it out and notify him that I had done so.

Was This Good Business?

Some retailers are far too ready to cut a price; others are far too loath to do it. There is undoubtedly a time when cutting is the wrong thing to do, and there is undoubtedly a time when it is the right thing to do. Recognizing these occasions is one of the fundamentals of successful merchandising.

For months the supply of a certain English fruit jam has been very light. The English Government commandeered most of the output for the troops, and the United States got only the leavings. The price has continually gone up. All the old stock in the country has been drawn on, and some of the goods which have been offered by retailers were two years' old. Of course the quality has gradually deteriorated, until the other day a customer at one of the large central Philadelphia stores got a jar which had half turned to sugar and had lost practically all its juice. Other purchases of this jam which were very nearly as bad had been made shortly before that. Of course the top price was charged for all of it.

This store has lost a good customer by doing this. She is convinced that she is being plucked and she has transferred her account to another store. What should this store have done that it did not do? It seems to me that when its stock began to go back it should have cut the price and cleaned it out. The old stuff was not worth the full price, and the fact that some people would grudgingly pay the full price rather than do without was not sufficient reason, I respectfully submit, for charging it. This retailer was guilty of pure greed when he squeezed the last cent from his shop-worn stock. He probably feels he has done a fine stroke of business, but has he?

What doth it profit a merchant if he gain an exorbitant profit on twenty jars of jam and lose a good customer forever?

Fifty Years Ahead of the Times.

The California State Superintendent of Weights and Measures has taken an interesting stand on schemes like advertising sixteen pounds of sugar for $1 when bought with other goods. He says they violate the California law against dishonest advertising and unfair competition, and has ordered one firm to discontinue them. Here is the order which was sent concern in question:—

The attention of this depa is called to your advertising local paper where you offe sugar, sixteen pounds for $ condition the sale of samc the purchase of other comm the profits of which, no makes up for the loss th may sustain in the delivery o at a price below the standar ket value of same.

Advertising the sale of 'a commodity, and promising this commodity at a price bel market value, and conditioni sale upon the purchase of commodities, which other cor ties are sold at values in exc the true market value, which sive profit is calculated to m for the loss in the sale of the commodities, is altogether m ing, and has a general tende disturb legitimate business.

It further has a tendency turb and disrupt the princi legitimate and fair competiti tween merchants and does not to the interests of the consun fact, it is a subterfuge metl obtaining business through r resentation.

Section 654A of the Penal under the title of "False Ad ing Prohibited," covers this and makes the committal of a misdemeanor.

Your attention having been to this matter will, no doubt, r any further cause for the c of this department.

CHAS. G. JOHNSO State Supt. of Weights and ures.

It would be fine if this w but I would willingly make est wager that it is not tru that the first court that gets say so. There is no law now istence which is far-reaching to stop things that merely " legitimate business." We a ceeding in that direction, l have a long way to go bef get officially to the point wh California Weights and M Superintendent has planted h My own belief is that we wil get quite there.

If a concern offers 16 pou sugar for $1, provided it is with other goods, and the p those other goods has no raised, I see nothing whatev is against the law or that is slightest degree a fraud.

ll Shows Up American Fair Trade League Suit as ding and Childish. Beef Stew Order Seems to Have n Placed at Last. Paper Bag Concern Involved. ·ket Summary.

w York, April 28, 1916.

r the week Mr. George B. president of the Sperry & ion Co., issued a statement he shows the suit brought im by Dr. Galloway, of the n Fair Trade League, to be st trifle. In the last issue orrespondence this suit was and discussed. The Ameri- r Trade League issued on which retailers were state their impressions of stamps. It appears that the z Hutchinson Co. had some s printed, at their own ex- nd circulated these among retailers. The answers ese retailers gave were then ed to the League. Dr. Gal- ntered suit for heavy dam- ainst Mr. Caldwell on the ground that the blank, which the latter had reprinted, contained Dr. Galloway's name, and its unauthorized used by Mr. Caldwell was injurious.

In Mr. Caldwell's statement he sets forth considerable correspondence between himself and the League, in which he offers to throw the business of the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. wide open to any of the League investigators. In one of his letters to the League he wrote as follows:—

> I am very anxious that this investigation shall be made by your committee in a spirit of absolute frankness and honesty. I welcome it because as a new officer of this company and as a person who believes in premiums, I am desirous of avoiding, so far as it may be done, any of the mistakes many other forms of advertising have made. I certainly believe that out of such a conference as we can have with your committee and your committee with us, we will arrive at some fair conclusion that will be mutually advantageous. To that end you can rest assured that we will co-operate fully with you and your committee, and would like to have you visit us if I can urge you to do so before the 20th of August, at which time I am now planning to take a short vacation.

Later when the League had its blanks printed and sent them out, the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. makes no secret of the fact that it had some duplicates printed, which, of course, it had a perfect right to do, as the blank was not copyrighted. Mr. Caldwell's statement as to this is as follows:—

> Further to aid in an impartial investigation, we had printed—at our own expense—Dr. Galloway's list of questions without answers and submitted them to many merchants for their consideration. Perhaps we were wrong in assuming that the American Fair Trade League wanted an impartial investigation of the trading stamp and coupon question, but we did so assume, and this was our only reason for having these blanks printed.
> All replies to Dr. Galloway's questions whcih were received at the office of the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. and the Hamilton Corporation were forwarded by us to the American Fair Trade League. The assumption of Dr. Galloway, that he has been damaged in his reputation could not have arisen from this transaction, inasmuch as it was a matter entirely between ourselves and the American Fair Trade League. If, by any implication, Dr. Galloway could have been injured in his reputation as an economist it could have happened only by a public announcement of these facts, that Dr. Galloway has made himself, or permitted the American Fair Trade League to make for him.
> The replies which we received, I forwarded to Dr. Galloway under date of February 11th and again on February 17, 1916, so that the committee could have the benefit thereof. Had there been anything other than honest co-operation intended, I certainly would not have sent batches of replies that came first into our hands, and had to pass through my office, to Dr. Galloway. The cause of Dr. Galloway's suit against the Sperry & Hutchinson Co. and myself can be found in the fact that I am president of the National Trade Association, as the published statement of the secretary of the American Fair Trade League now declares, and am consequently opposed to the passing of the bill for price maintenance which the American Fair Trade League is promoting and which I consider to be inimical to the interests of the consumer and the millions of trading stamp collectors and to the merchants and manufacturers using profit sharing methods.

Last time it was on "A SQUARE DEAL as to WEIGHTS"
Now suppose we talk about "A SQUARE DEAL with ONES-SELF"

Here's to you again, our Fellow-Merchants of the Atlantic Slope—A busy and promising Seed Time for one and all. And a generous Ha round out the year later. Are we putting in "our best licks" for that by insisting on A Square Deal with Ones-Self?

You are much interested in Canned Goods, Appetizers worth while in every Family, making for Health, Pleasure and Economy, and if of righ and well sold leaving a quota of profit in your Bank Account unless you throw it away. Do you ever thoughtlessly do that? "The Burned Child the Fire." You are interested, of course, in the Canner Fraternity; it is important to you that they should be Honorable, Fair, "Up-to-snuff," with En to fully meet the occasion every Season.

Did you attend their Ninth Annual Convention? Have you read about it? In combination there were 1st: The National Canners' Associati The National Machinery and Supplies Association—3d: The National Canned Goods and Dried Fruit Brokers' Association. Six Hundred men a the opening Session in the crowded Auditorium of the Hotel Seelbach, at 8 P. M., Monday Evening, February 7th. These Merchants and Manuf rose to their feet as the Rev. Dr. E. L. Powell, a notable Pastor of Louisville was announced to offer an Invocation. There have been Invocations and tions; doubtless this Prayer will stand out in the memory of every man there as none other he ever heard. All listened in silence with intense i all were profoundly impressed by the Reverence, the Nobility of View and Utterance, the insistence of High Toned and Beneficent results in busin its measuring up to True Ideals. And at its close each man sat down with a sense that it was a much more manly thing to be "A Merchant as is a Me than he had been thinking.

Whoever before tried working a Prayer to the Almighty Father of us all, into the advertising pages of a Grocers' Journal? But here goes off, Brothers! Dr. Powell shall lead our crowd for three minutes and see if he does not appeal to the best that is in us as he addresses Almighty G our own Convention of Thirty Thousand Men.

(Notice certain pivotal words in Dr. Powell's Prayer.)

INVOCATION.

We thank Thee, OUR FATHER, for THIS OCCASION AND HOUR. We thank Thee for the FELLOWSHIP represented in this gathering

May these men come together under a solemn sense of RESPONSIBILITY, under the INSPIRATION OF THE NEW AND HIGHER II in business life. May they find JOY IN PLANNING AND DEVISING METHODS AND MEANS TO BEST SERVE their great constituency.

Teach them, and all of us, the GREAT LESSON OF COMMUNITY INTEREST. May we know that ONLY AS ALL ARE BENEFITE EACH BE BENEFITED. May we NOT SEEK OUR OWN PROFIT AT THE EXPENSE OF OTHERS, but may we seek OUR OWN PRO MAKING PROFITABLE TO ALL—the business which enlists our thought and service.

Help us to CAPITALIZE OUR IDEALS and to know that THE INVESTMENT OF COURAGE AND CONSCIENCE AND OPTIMIS bring rich returns.

And as we think of Material Interests may we know that the whole World of Commerce can only be brightened and exalted as we shall i business IN TERMS OF CO-OPERATION WITH GOD in material concerns.

Help us to know that as business men we can make a splendid contribution through our Business to the Country we love. Help us through th that we put into Business to make THE STARS ON OUR FLAG, which are symbolic of our Ideals, TO SHINE WITH NEW LUSTER AND BRIGHTENING VIVIDNESS.

We are met, Holy Father, in the Name of BUSINESS, but as well in the Name of SERVICE. May the Genius of Money Making be consecr the end sought—THAT OF BESTOWING THE GREATEST SERVICE WITHIN OUR POWER to those whom we are called upon to serve.

May FELLOWSHIP, FRIENDSHIP and FRATERNITY, be the high notes in the music that shall come forth from all our material interes

The Doctor's Point of View seems to be that all business men are Brothers, and not Ishmaelites "Whose hand was against every man and every hand was against them." Any Merchant should not be tempted to make use of any measure that happens to suit the whim or emergency of the mom may not go on the plan that "It is every man for himself, and the Devil take the hindmost," but, rather, that "an injury to one is an injury to all." about the suggestion that Courage, Confidence and Optimism are better than sneaking under-cuts; devilish greed; "do the other fellow before he chance to do you." Had this Western Parson better stick to his pulpit and let enterprising Canners, etc., alone, or is he DEAD RIGHT?

One thing is sure, every man hopes when the fight is over and he lies in his grave, his fellow Merchants with affection may be able to write s Epitaph as this—"A Merchant of High Ideal; ready to serve all. A man of courage, conscience, hope. He was as glad to help others as he was out himself."

And how wonderful it is that the Great Father is willing to be a Special Partner in your business and mine. If we are big-hearted Merchants, whether large or small sphere, we can serve Society and honor our Flag as well as get gains to ourselves.

So one's success rates not by how big a business he builds up nor how much money it makes for him, but of how much real service he is to all, without to any. Surely the Kentucky Minister does not understand business, or would he think that the Golden Fruit of A Merchant's Life was to produce OWSHIP—FRIENDSHIP—FRATERNITY. After all, are these only the wild fancies of an Inland Priest, or did he get a Vision from Heaven, oes he bring a God-Word to the Canners of the United States and to our Crowd of 30,000 Coast Merchants? How can we boil it down and will this "Co-operation for General Welfare" instead of "Competition to wreck the other fellow."

Editor Barrett tells us the Six Hundred Canner Men stood, intent, reverent, and as if inspired by a new Revelation. Did they go home new men? ennobled Merchants?

But, verily, was not the Kentuckian like one of God's own old-time Prophets, as he took up the Ancient Benediction, taught the Priests by the lips ıovah?

"The Lord bless us and keep us, the Lord make his face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us, the Lord lift up His countenance upon ; and give us peace," through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

He was going back, some ways, but, Men, have you ever seriously studied the business standard set by the Great Law Giver, Moses, thirty-five ed years ago? What would happen if this were adopted by our 30,000 Merchant Leaders as their Code of Ethics for 1916?

"Thou shalt not take up a false report; be an unrighteous witness; thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil or speak in a cause to turn ide after a multitude to wrest justice. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow."

"Thou shalt not have in thy bags divers weights, a great and a small; thou shalt not have in thy House divers measures, a great and a small. perfect and just measure shalt thou have, that thy days may be long upon the land which Jehovah, thy God, giveth thee. For all that do unright- ousness are an abomination unto Jehovah, thy God."

"Thou shalt not steal, neither shalt thou deal falsely, nor lie one to another. And ye shall observe all my statutes and all my ordinances nd do them. I am Jehovah."

Do we Modern Merchants realize the high standard of these old-time Business Ethics?

One very noticeable feature besides the remarkable character of the Invocation is "A Code of Ethics," deliberately submitted by The Brokers' Associa- o its Members. These are some of the points:

1. The Broker, as the connecting link between Buyer and Seller, must maintain the dignity of his position.
2. Absolute fairness and honor to both Buyer and Seller.
3. Respect the rights of competitors and never attempt, by unfair means, to interfere with their business. The Broker's client is his stock in trade; leliberate attempt by another Broker to unfairly secure such representation is against good brokerage ethics.

Co-operation among Brokers is the best way to strengthen their position in the business world.

The division of Brokerage with either Buyer or Seller is the poorest way of building up a brokerage business—indicates that the Broker puts a low on his services. Reputable Buyers and Sellers count this most unfair competition and an indication of weakness on the part of the Broker.

Contracts, etc., should be full and accurate and furnished to both Buyer and Seller. The Broker should always stand for a fair deal between Buyer Seller. All contracts should contain a Clause providing for Arbitration in case of dispute.

Good for the Brokers' Ethical Standards. Well, how shall the Canners and we Thirty Thousand get up to the original and worthy ideals in the year 1916?

One Saturday Afternoon Our Senior happened to be at his door as a bright lad of fourteen came across the lawn with a swinging step, and handed The Evening Post. There was a cordial Greeting and our Senior said:

"What are you doing now, Morris?"

"Oh, in High School."

"How long before you finish?"

"One year more."

"What then?"

"I am going to College, Sir; I'm bound to have an education."

"And what then?"

"I don't know yet."

"Where is your Church Home?"

(Hesitatingly) "I—don't—live in M."

"Where do you live?"

(Still hesitating)—"In N."

"And where do you go to Church in N?"

(A little more hesitation)—"I go to the Synagogue. I am a Hebrew."

Here his face flushed and his eyes fell. Our Senior went on earnestly, "Morris! do you realize you have in your veins as fine blood as the World ever known? Aren't you proud of Abraham? 'The Friend of God?' God had said to him, 'Get thee out of thy Country and from thy Father's House come to a land I will give thee and make of thee a great Nation and in thy seed shall all the families of the Earth be blessed.' And Abraham did it! came out at the call of his God! So he got his name 'The Hebrew'—'The Comeouter.' Remember that, Morris, 4,000 years ago Abraham of your d 'came out' at the call of God and went, not knowing where he was going, and he was called 'The Friend of God,' and you have the red blood of grand old 'Comeouter' in your veins. Aren't you proud of it?"

By this time Morris' Eyes were flashing; he was standing erect; his cheeks were glowing. Our Senior went on: "I have true New England Blood ıy veins; very proud of it; none better! My Grandfather on my Mother's side was in the War of 1812; marched a Company of Militia from West necticut to New London; he didn't have the chance to fight but he was ready to do it. To the end of his days everyone called him 'Captain Sam. Beers' he was as clean and true as he was patriotic. Am I proud of my Grandfather's Blood? On my Father's side my Great-Grandfather lies buried in an Country Cemetery in Westchester County, New York; and this is his Epitaph: 'A Soldier of the Revolution.' Am I proud of my Great-Grandfather's ɔd? Along my line they were all clean, true men. They lived up to their Blood. But good Blood don't make a man unless he lives up to it. I know a lot of Yankees who are mean, small, low-down fellows; even their splendid Blood don't save them. What's the trouble? They don't live up to it! I my noble New England Blood back 300 years; but you can trace your noble Blood back 4,000 years to 'The Friend of God.'"

"And how about living up to your Blood? Like my low-down Yankees there are a lot of low-down Hebrews; their blood is all right but they live up to it. No Blood will save a man unless he lives up to his best. I musn't keep you longer, Morris, don't forget those other splendid men of Blood—Joseph and Moses and Daniel. Grander men never lived. You and I must live up to our Blood! Good-bye!"

You should have seen that lad's radiant face as he wrung the Senior's hand and turning away he looked back and said, "Good-bye! Thank you! never forget what you have said to me this afternoon."

Two years later he met one of our Senior's Daughters at the Depot and inquired after his health. He said, "Please tell your Father I shall never f what he said to me on that Saturday afternoon."

And Morris is working it out. He has a burning ambition to live up to his Blood. God bless him. It is splendidly worth his while, is it not?

Two hundred and fifty years ago there was another man of rare vision. He saw in dreams what all these witnesses have been saying to other ways. Do you remember the picture? There was a man on his knees. He had a little muck-rake in his hand. He did not look up or about him raked to himself the straws, the small sticks, and the dust of the muck. There stood One overhead with a Celestial Crown in his hand, offering it to in exchange for his muck-rake, but the man would neither look up nor regard.

Rev. Dr. Jowett, one of our famous City Pastors, has prepared a book containing a brief prayer for every morning in the year. One of the harmonizes with all that has gone before, we think you will like to see it:

"My Father, give me the grace of fair dealing. Enlarge my heart so that I may have room for my Brother. May I not crowd him out of my thou May I surround him with large and gracious sympathy."

The call of the Kentucky Clergyman to High Merchantly Manhood rings in our ears. The Clean-cut Ethics of the Broker's Association are befo Do we catch the enthusiasm of the lad whose soul is fired to reach His Best? And from now, is the morning uplook our prayer?

Accept our best wishes, and believe us,

Yours for FELLOWSHIP, FRIENDSHIP, and FRATERNITY,

Investing in a Town Building Corporation.

Phoenixville, Pa., April 25, 1916.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you let me know in your columns what you think of taking a share of stock in the new city of Lomax, Illinois. There is an organization that sends me a paper which tells how the money would double itself in five or six years, and if that is true it would be a fine investment. I believe they want to build several new cities in the United States. One share is $10 and I would be glad to invest a little if the thing was O. K. Perhaps you know something about it.

Yours truly,
MATTHEW PENO.

Don't you believe that your money invested in any real estate promotion scheme would double itself in five or six years. It has never been done unless gold was discovered in or near a new town, or oil, or something calculated to draw people. There are so very many things that a scheme like this must overcome before it can get on a paying basis that we look on it as an exceedingly hazardous investment. In fact it is hardly an "investment" at all; it is more of a wager.

r corporation carries less over-expense than any company which I am familiar. Econ-is our watchword. The total ies of our officers do not exceed 0 a year. One of the many safeguards which our directors and officers have inaugurated is the purchasing system of merchandise and equipment which only permits the buyer or the one purchasing said merchandise or equipment to purchase same on signed requisition blanks of our corporation, and these requisition or purchasing blanks must be countersigned by the writer or one of his assistants, and these signatures are only attached when our corporation has the cash in bank to pay for said merchandise or equipment, which greatly safeguards each stockholders' investment.

We pay spot cash for every dollar's worth of merchandise we buy, take advantage of every discount, thereby establishing a good record with all manufacturers, producers and concerns with which we deal. We have not attempted to establish a permanent rating with Bradstreets or Duns because each day we are adding to our assets and any rating given us last month would not do us justice to-day. We always carry a good bank balance with our depository (the Second National Bank, Toledo, Ohio) to take advantage of any offerings of merchandise for spot cash.

One of the late important transactions of our corporation is the purchase of the desirable factory site, buildings and power plant of Messrs. Waldcutter, Kahlenberg & Co., chair manufacturers, of Toledo. This purchase will be completed as soon as the title of the property has been examined and approved by our attorneys. Arrangements have been made for the sale of sufficient stock to pay for this property without adding one dollar of obligations or indebtedness to our corporation.

This large and valuable property, acreage and well constructed buildings, railway sidings, with our present equipment, will give our corporation one of the largest, most modern, diversified food manufacturing plants in the country, together with large and ample storage facilities for our central storage plant, which will serve our branch distributing plants. This will place our corporation in a position to turn out its special brands of merchandise and take advantage of large purchases of other merchandise and own same at the smallest possible cost.

Our corporation is now about two and one-half years' old, has on the market about 270 of its own manufactured products sold under its trade-mark Un-Gro-Co which produces a profit to our corporation from 9 to 320 per cent. on these respective articles.

One of the strongest points to me regarding the earning capacity and profit to be made by each stockholder on the stock of our corporation is the present selling price of stocks of companies manufacturing "Royal Baking Powder," "Ivory

As an illustration, "Cream of Wheat" stock, the secretary of that corporation says, is practically not on the market; is a very close corporation, the stock being held in very few hands, that the corporation is only capitalized for $50,000, of which but $40,000 has ever been issued, the shares being $100 each. The surplus account is about $800,000 and has no outstanding indebtedness, and for the past ten years has earned 7 per cent. on a basis of $20,000 for each $100 share; this would amount to $1,400 a year profit on the $100 invested.

The Week's One-Time Ads.

After I read the Ferris ad. this week I just sat still and thought for five or ten minutes. The bigness of a concern in this day spending its good advertising money, not trying to sell goods to people, but trying to make people better retailers! Just think of that! I'll tell you this, gentlemen, if I was in business that's the kind of firms I'd tie up to. I'd buy everything I could from them; because I'd be all-fired sure of a square deal. Just read that ad. Read it through—every word of it. "A Square Deal with One's Self" is the title, and it's a real uplifter, believe me. I say it does yo to stop in the midst of all other ads.—"Please buy this "Please buy that," and find body that thinks more of k business clean than he does ing his own goods to you. pages and a half in that ad. a a word about Ferris Ham Bacon from the first word last! I can't get over it. C beat it? The man that doesn every word in that ad. ain friend. He ain't even a fri his ownself.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is unchanged for the week. Business is good to active and stocks are undoubtedly down to hard pan. By this is meant stocks in importers' hands. Buyers have good stocks, and for that reason are coming into the market just as slowly as they can. Prices are unchanged for the week.

Coffee.

No change has occurred in the coffee market during the past week. Options are fluctuating more or less, but actual coffee is practically where it was a week ago. All grades of Rio and Santos are unchanged. Milds are quite slow and the prices are fairly steady. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

The sugar market bids fair to go to 8 cents, at least, for granulated. At the present writing most refiners' quotation is 7½. The latest quotation on raws is 6.52. The situation is exceedingly strong, on account of the scarcity of raws, and it is as certain as anything can be that refined will go higher. It is predicted, in fact, that it will go to 9 cents. Even if the war should come suddenly to an end it is not seen how prices could weaken very much.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has advanced 10 points. Compound syrup is dull at ruling quotations. Sugar syrup is high but quiet. Molasses quiet but unchanged.

Fish.

Some holders of mackerel are a little softer in their ideas than they were sometime ago, largely because of the very light demand. The undertone, however, is still very strong on account of actual scarcity, and the concession is trifling. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. The season is over. Salmon is wanted, but the prices show no change for the week. Domestic sardines are still scarce and firm. New fish are being packed, but are not yet on the market. Imported sardines are very scarce and very high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are about on last week's basis. For Maryland 3s the average price is $1 a dozen f. o. b. factory in a large way. The demand is fair. Corn is firm throughout the entire line, and some holders of shoepeg are asking an advance of 5 cents per dozen. Peas are also stiffening up slightly, especially the lower grades, which have been the principal cause of the weakness. Holders are feeling much inclined to ask more for their holdings. Apples are still very dull, but are expected to improve as to demand very shortly. The immediate future of canned apples depends on what happens to green apples, the demand for which is very large and the price very low. California canned goods are fairly active, especially peaches, which are scarce, and have advanced about 20 cents per dozen over the opening prices. Prospects for the pack of California fruit especially as to peaches. Eastern staple canned g changed and dull.

Butter.

The receipts of butter ar ing. The demand is suffi keep them cleaned up, how though prices declined abou per pound during the we increase in the make can l for as the season advances, ditional slight decline. Th of butter is averaging goo season.

Eggs.

The continued demand for storage keeps prices firm and the market healt sumptive demand is nor eggs are pouring into st large volumes. The qua tinues very good.

Cheese.

The cheese market is unchanged prices and a no sumptive demand. Stock cheese are reducing rapidl there is any change old ch take a slight advance. Ne is now coming forward reg about 2 cents per pound b

This photograph isn't big enough to show you the real advantage this store has gained by using Baines' Brackets. You can see the neat, compact effect, but you can't see the saving in shelf room, which is the main point.

This store, whose picture appears above, actually and literally has one-fourth more goods on its shelves than it had before. Why? Because Baines' Brackets support the shelves without uprights. The shelves are clear for goods from end to end.

Wheat and Flour.

Until the Government report is issued giving the area of winter wheat abandoned, the market will probably fluctuate within a range of a few cents per bushel.

It is well to remember in connection with the forthcoming Government report that the change in the par yield per acre is from 16.9 bushels on April 1st to 18.6 bushels on May 1st, allows for an abandoned area of 9.1 per cent. without lowering the condition for April 1st. In other words, the condition on April 1st was reported as 78.3 per cent. on 37,256,000 acres, basing the par yield on April 1st, on 16.9 bushels per acre, therefore if 9.1 per cent. of the aera is abandoned, it would leave 33,851,000 acres under cultivation, and this, with the same condition of 78.3 per cent., would indicate the same total yield as was indicated on April 1st. Or to put it in another way, if there was no abandoned area a condition of 71.14 per cent. on May 1st would be the equivalent of the 78.3 per cent. condition on April 1st.

It is quite likely that the abandoned area will be as high this year as in 1912, when it was 15.4 per cent. If the Government report discloses an abandoned area of 15 per cent., the area remaining will be 31,667,600 acres, which on an estimated condition of 75 per cent., indicates a crop of 442,000,000 bushels.

Were it not for the danger of a break with Germany there would be large investment buying of wheat, for many speculators believe that on its merits wheat should sell very considerably higher, but they are deterred from making investments of this character so long as our foreign relations are so strained. Meanwhile the weight of supplies, the difficulty of ocean transportation and the indifferent foreign demand completely overshadow the bullish crop conditions.

We wish to again call attention to the prospect of a railroad strike. The Pennsylvania Railroad is already placarding its stations in the effort to influence public opinion. We do not see how it will be possible for the railroads to grant the demands of the trainmen unless the Interstate Commerce Commission will at the same time allow them to advance the rates of freight.

The railroads are anticipating a strike, for their placards are headed "Railroad Strike Threatened," and it seems to us that prudent flour buyers should carry liberal stocks at this time. A "tie-up" of a week means two months' demoralization.

Sugar.

The market continues very strong in sympathy with the strong and advancing raw market. Federal advanced their price to-day to basis fine granulated 7.50 cents. Pennsylvania, Warner and Arbuckle are also quoting this basis. Franklin, McCahan, American and Howell are still quoting basis 7.40 cents. The demand has been very good at this price and further advances are looked for. Withdrawals against contracts are very good. Some refiners report slight delays in making shipments. We are gradually nearing the season of increased consumption and cannot too strongly urge the trade to carry better stocks in store and to order somewhat ahead of their immediate requirements. Shipments from Philadelphia can still be made promptly. Freights in transit are moving rather slowly, owing to congestions.

Tariff.—The President on Thursday last signed the bill thereby continuing the present duty on sugars indefinitely after May 1st.

Raw Sugar.—The market has ruled very strong, active and higher again, with large sales, aggregating 150 to 200,000 bags to Federal, Warner and Arbuckle refiners and operators at equal 6.46 cents for nearby positions and equal 6.52 cents for May and June shipment.

Advices from Cuba report that rainy season has commenced. One hundred and fifty-three Centrals grinding.

Futures on the Exchange have ruled strong and higher again, closing bids showing about three points advance, as follows: April-May, 5.48 cents; June, 5.54 cents; July, 5.58 cents; August, 5.60 cents; September, 5.62 cents.

Spices.

The market is fairly active. Some goods in the list are offered at slightly lower prices, due to active selling on account of recent arrivals. Cables, however, still report high prices on nearly everything throughout the list.

Pepper.—All grades slightly lower on account of fresh arrivals. The demand is fairly good and a sharp turn upward is just as likely as a decline in market values.

Red Peppers.—In fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Cloves.—In steady demand, with fair trading at slightly lower prices. The market, however, closing moderately firmer.

Pimento (Allspice).—Rather dull and unchanged.

Mace.—Rather quiet during the week. Prices unchanged in all grades.

Nutmegs.—Fairly active at steady but unchanged prices.

Cassias.—Prices declined some little, have recovered and higher prices are now likely. The recent large arrivals have gone mostly directly into consuming channels.

Gingers.—Dull and without any changes to report during the week.

Tapioca.—In fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Paprikas.—Quiet. Prices generally unchanged. The ocean freight situation has had a tendency to keep prices firm.

Listen in on This With Both Ears.

Now I want you fellows that have Economy stores and chain stores to fight to listen here while I tell you about a friend of mine that has 'em too and gets away with it, although he charges more for his stuff than anybody else up there.

And he ain't got any patent on it either.

He has a store in a 5,000 town where there's three chain stores, all of 'em Economy. They all cut prices all to thunder and none of 'em deliver. And they all have better locations than he has because he's out of the center of town while they're right in it.

He charges more for his stuff than the chain stores did even before they turned Economy. And as I said before he gets away with it. His business is as fine as silk and he ain't losing a bit of it.

Especially in meats. He gets two and three cents a pound more for his meats than anybody else. I asked him if his meats were any better than anybody else's; he said he didn't know as they were a bit better, only he was as fussy as he could be when he bought 'em.

But meats is meats nowadays pretty much—you know that, and the chance is the other stores' meats are every bit as good as his.

The rest of his stuff is all higher too and he don't have any special sales or anything.

Of course, he delivers his stuff just like he used to.

Now I'll tell you how he does it, and it ain't going to take me more than a couple of minutes.

He does it by never falling down on anything. If some fool woman calls up and wants some little thing sent right away, and he agrees to do it, it goes when he said it would even if he has to send his wife with it.

Time after time he's taken it himself when there wasn't anybody else to.

And here's another thing he never does—he never says "it's on the way" when it ain't. If there's one fool lie a fellow tells that's more foolish than others, it's that—"it's on the way." Sting a customer once with that, and let her find it out, and your word is punk with her for the rest of your life. It's the foolishest thing you can do.

He did it once, years ago, and lost a good customer—a preacher's wife—and he turned over a new leaf that minute, he told me.

He's simply got his people where they're willing to put up the extra coin in return for the extra service.

If anybody makes a kick—stuff ain't right, or even if they only say it ain't right—he takes it back right off the reel. No argument, no sour mug, back it comes, and if it's any good he eats it in his own house. That way, it don't cost him anything to take it back and he gets a fine rep for nothing.

"Don't the wife kick?" I said once, "at eating other people's leavings?"

"She used to," he said, "but I made her see it and she don't kick any more."

He didn't tell me whether he made her see it with a strap or not, and I was too much of a gemman to ask him. Some wives find it hard to see things without a strap.

"I'll tell you something," I said to him. "What you say is all right about the extra service and all, but a lot of these customers of yours don't know you're charging 'em more. If they did, they'd probably go."

"They do know it," he said, "for whenever I can do it I tell them so. I tell them I can't sell the kind of stuff and give the service they want at cut-store prices. You know I don't pretend to be cheap—I tell them I'm the highest price store in town. I opened a fine new account yesterday with a woman and told her right then that she'd find me higher, but I believed she'd be glad to pay it after she'd been dealing here for a little while."

I'll tell you what I heard a woman say to him about a month ago. She was in there wanting some and after she looked 'em said:—

"Why Mr. ————, to me that the oranges you when I order them by tele rather better than these."

"They are, Mrs. Potts," "because I always select th you telephone them. I customers to feel when t me to pick out their stuff that they get as good as if it themselves."

That was a new one on many do that.

But maybe she didn't ea You could see it soaking could just hear her saying body:—

"Yes he is higher price such a satisfaction to deal

No. 361.—When a Bank Marks Your Check "Not Suff" When Your Balance Was Large Enough to Take Care of It.

A reader of these articles complains because his bank refused to pay a check of his which was fully covered by the balance on deposit and asks whether he is obliged to stand the odium of this without redress. Here is his letter and some comment upon it which may be of general usefulness:—

New York, N. Y.

Here is my case: I started in business here about a year ago with very small capital and no credit. I have been building up a credit, but it has been slow work, though I have succeeded in getting three or four houses to grant me a small line. One of these is important, and having a credit with that house is a big advantage to my business. I have only had the credit with the latter house for about two months and I paid my last bill on the day when due with a check. The check came back marked not sufficient and the house wrote me a letter about it and said the account was closed. I wrote them that I knew I had more than sufficient money in bank to cover the check, but they did not believe what I said, as many people tell them the same thing, and they refused to open the account. I went to the bank and told them about it, and they looked it up and found that I was right. A deposit that I had made the day before had not gotten on the books—somebody was away sick—and the check should not have gone back. I went to the house that had closed my account and told them, but they did not seem to be much interested. They still refused to open the account again. Not having a credit with with this house is hurting my business, because I have to have their line. If you can give me any advice I will appreciate it.

Yours,
JOSEPH P. MORAN.

Perhaps the easiest way out of this would be to demand from the bank a letter explaining that the return of the check unpaid was its fault, and that your funds were ample to meet the check when presented. This letter if shown to the people who have closed your account should cause them to reinstate you. Banks usually refuse to give letters of this sort, however. Some of them tell you to have your people call up the cashier or the paying teller and he will tell them about it. This is not always sufficient, as the house in question often considers it too much bother.

If you cannot get the thing straightened out in any other way, then I advise you without qualification that you have a right of action against the bank. The law holds that what it did is an injury to your credit, and will grant you damages even though you cannot show actual damages. I understand that you can show some damages, however.

Cases to this effect are being decided all the time and the law is well settled. The latest one was decided only a few days ago by the Alabama Court of Appeals. It was much like yours. The plaintiff drew a check on his bank in settlement of an account. It was returned unpaid on account of insufficient funds, though the depositor had plenty of money there to meet it. The depositor sued for damages on the ground that his credit had been injured and the court held:—

> If a bank or banker refuses to pay the check of a depositor when the depositor has sufficient funds on deposit to meet the check, the depositor may not only recover his money in a suit, but may also have substantial damages. A trader who gives his check to a creditor upon a bank at which he has funds is almost necessarily injured in his credit by the dishonor of his check, for it is a slur upon him of a similar character to that which is caused by the utterance of slander throwing doubt upon his solvency. In both cases he is allowed to recover substantial damages without proving special damages.

What is said about damages means that a depositor would be given such damages as the jury considered sufficient to compensate him for what had been done to him, even though he was unable to put his finger on any particular item of loss and say to the bank: "This came from what you did." In some cases a plaintiff can collect only the damages he can prove he suffered, but this kind of case is different.

I want to say something now which ought to be useful to a very large number of business men who keep regular accounts with their banks. Certainly it will be news to many of them. I have had occasion to investigate a number of these cases where depositors have claimed that their banks sent back checks marked "not suff." when the balance was large enough to take care of them, and I found that in many of these cases the was under the delusion th a right to deposit in his a check or checks drawn people on other banks, per far distant city, and then ately draw against them be had a chance to get thro be paid. A depositor has right. A check is mere body's promise to pay, or more accurately, it is an o bank to pay so much mon person named in it as pa fore the check gets back to on which it is drawn, ma may happen to prevent ment. Payment may be the account may be clo it may develop that has been done in connec the check, and so on. Jots From a Jobber's Note Book

The war has certainly brought about a wide difference in the manner of ordering foreign goods. Not only in prices, but in the degree of ease with which goods can be gotten. The house with which I am connected sells a good deal of an English fancy grocery specialty. Before the war broke out we could cable an order, it would be sent at once to a boat that was leaving, perhaps, at once, and would be in our store in ten days. If we get an order through in sixty days now we are fortunate. The situation is particularly acute with regard to English jams and marmalades. Almost none are coming to this country, being needed for the troops, and the very large trade which has been built up in this country for these goods is being fed, as far as may be, with domestic goods, which are not at all the equal of the foreign, or by old foreign stock at an advanced price. One well known brand of English jam which formerly sold at 28 cents is now generally selling at 35. Besides being called on by the English Government to supply their goods to the troops, the English manufacturers are fearfully up against it both because of the scarcity of labor and the high price of sugar. A certain brand of high grade English syrup sold quite freely in this country has advanced several times, and the retail price has advanced 50 per cent. It was 20 cents a can and is now 30 cents. The demand is steadily diminishing in consequence. English mustard is also growing very hard to get and the price is very high. Importers in this country have some stocks, but they will not last long. Consumers of English mustard do not seem to be willing to accept the domestic in its place, and they go on paying a higher and higher price for the imported as long as they can get it. Probably no French peas will come over this year at all. None of the packers are soliciting orders, and importers are not expecting to get any. There are a few in the country, but not many. Belgian peas, which are used as a substitute for French, are also out of the market. All this helps our own pea packers, or ought to, although the total sale of French peas in this country is not very large of late years. Since coloring them has ceased, they have grown to look just like the best domestic peas, and can hardly be told from the latter when eaten. Fewer and fewer people are willing to pay 30 and 35 cents for a one-pound can.

Another foreign food product which is being largely affected by the war is Holland condensed milk. Before the war, the American condensed milk manufacturers were being hard hit by the Holland milk. It was being delivered in this country at a figure 35 cents a case less than our own manufacturers could make it for. And it was good milk. Naturally it sold, and the trade on it was rapidly increasing when the war stopped it all. To-day not a case of it is coming in, but on the contrary, American manufacturers are getting 100,000 and 200,000 case orders to go abroad, at better prices than they can get at home. Every pound of Holland milk made is now sold in Europe. The reason Holland condensed milk could be brought 4,000 miles and sold below our own manufacturer's cost was two-fold. To begin with, the cost of labor on the farm in Holland and in the condenseries was hardly a third of what it is here. The main reason was, however, th condensed milk came in try free of duty, while manufacturers were cha both on the tin that the cans and their sugar. already badly handicapp labor cost, and the C made this worse by ma pay duty on their raw while admitting the finis of their foreign competi duty. However, the h facturers have forgotten the flush of the moment. highly prosperous at t time, being far behind i ders. The price of suga ing them somewhat—eve advance in sugar is equiv cents a case on the milk.

THE

Trenton, N. J., April 15, 1916.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I am constantly being approached by advertising solicitors wishing me to go in this scheme or that one, and the latest one was brought in here last week. I did not give the man an answer, but told him to come in later. Before he comes I should like to obtain your opinion. The scheme is as follows: It is called "Leading Retail Merchants of Trenton, N. J.," and is to be in book form about the size of the "Ladies' Home Journal." Half a page in the book costs $100 and entitles every advertiser to two hundred copies, which he can circulate where he pleases. Fine coated paper, the photographs of the merchant and his store, fine printing and so on. The solicitor shows a very fine paper which he got up in another town and he is a very slick talker, says he has signed up several of the leading merchants of the town. Perhaps it would be interesting for your other readers to hear of this scheme. Please advise me what you think of it.

Yours,
R. S. K.

Usually, these schemes are absolutely worthless, except as a sop to the vanity of the advertiser. In fact that is what they are intended to be, and it is the reason why they so often succeed where legitimate advertising enterprises fail. I have known dozens of merchants who never advertised in any other way than this. Every cent of their advertising expenditure was wasted, yet they could not be persuaded of that fact.

I say that these schemes are "usually" worthless. That is so because they must have, as a rule, an appeal which is so general that it has no particular point. These write-ups are usually nothing more than little histories of the merchant with his photograph thrown in. There is nothing about them to attract business, even if they are read, which usually they are not. Almost always the advertiser sends a few copies out to his friends or to distant members of his family, and the balance stay on a shelf somewhere. Very rarely is there any effort to distribute them where they will do the most good. If the right kind of matter was put in such an advertisement, and it was judiciously circulated, there isn't any reason why it shouldn't get results.

* * *

What kind of matter can be put in such advertising? Well, I remember one enterprising chap who filled his space in one of t cations with a little talk private brand of coffee, came to originate it, whe fered from other coffee Then he sent marked c number of people who trade he had been trying t he told me himself it go good customer and he really got him four. T reason why that kind of shouldn't get as good r write-up publication as i vided it is circulated a The average stuff that i space, however, as for when the advertiser was a valuable member of th Board he has been, the of his son and daughter singer, and so on—that vanity, but it has no ing value than blank p

A SPLENDID SELLER

Franklin Dessert and Table Sugar

This sugar is especially made for cereals, fruits, berries, desserts and other foods that are sweetened at the table. It grades between POWDERED and FINE GRANULATED and can be used either with a spoon or a shaker. It dissolves quickly and sweetens thoroughly.

So many articles are sweetened at the table that this sugar is a steady, all-year-round seller and its usefulness will be appreciated by your customers as soon as you tell them about it. Start them buying it and increase your sales of sugar. Of course it's packed in FRANKLIN CARTONS, so you can make a profit on it by saving the cost of labor, bags, twine and loss from overweight that would come out of your pocket, if you handled it in bulk. DESSERT AND TABLE is one of the best sellers in the whole line of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGARS.

Packed in 2 lb. CARTONS—48 lbs. to the CONTAINER

Other FRANKLIN CARTON SUGARS are packed in original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Shredded Wheat

It is an army that inspects every detail of its manufacture from the whole wheat grain to the crisp, golden brown Biscuits of whole wheat. This army of "advertisers" is making business for you. You don't have to "talk" Shredded Wheat to your customers. It is the best advertised cereal food in America. A fair deal for a fair dealer.

The Biscuit is packed in odorless spruce wood cases which may be easily sold for 10 or 15 cents, thereby adding to the grocer's profits.

What Do You Think of This?

¶ We struck a grocer not long ago that wouldn't have anything but Wheatena on his own table, but wouldn't stock it because he thought he handled enough cereals!

¶ Could anything surpass the inconsistency of that? How many of his customers were as insistent about a cereal as he was about Wheatena?

Trying to Help Retailers Systematize Their Business and Thus Get More Credit at Their Local Bank

Federal Trade Commission Says Many a Merchant Could Do Much Better if He Had Some More Bank Credit. An Effort Will Be Made to Help Him Get It.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has received from the Federal Trade Commission some matter which indicates that the Commission can probably be expected to do some exceedingly valuable work for business in general. The Commission is now collecting facts and figures with which it hopes to help merchants obtain more credit, always provided they deserve it, and thus extend their business operations. Many a merchant could double his business if he could increase his credit 25 per cent. The Commission hopes to show merchants how by running their business a little more systematically, they can deserve and obtain the additional credit from their local banks. Here is the Commission's own argument for the plan:—

> The small manufacturer, the country storekeeper and the retail merchant often do not get at the banks the credit that they ought to receive, owing to the fact that they are unable to present balance sheets in accordance with good business practice. These men, as a rule, are just as good business men, in many respects, as those of larger operations. They have brains, ability, knowledge of their wares and of their customers, but they do not speak the language of the banker in that they are not able to present a statement showing their true assets and liabilities.
> Frequently a business man with a credit of a few hundred dollars at his bank, based wholly on personal grounds, could, if he could produce a reliable balance sheet, readily obtain sufficient credit to enable him to rapidly expand his business along sound lines. Failing to obtain such credit, his business is limited and confined.
> Ability to borrow at the bank has a far-reaching effect on all credit, because to the bank, primarily, are directed inquiries for a rating of a manufacturer or merchant seeking credit for goods. An unfavorable or non-committal report from the bank results in a curtailment of opportunity. It also checks expansion.
> Bankers are in business to loan money to business men, and recognize that loans made on balance sheets that show a healthy condition are desirable loans. The banker will welcome any standard form of statement that will permit him easily to ascertain the exact liabilities and assets of his customer.
> It is recognized that no one standard system of accounting is applicable to all classes of business, but that special systems are required for each group or class of commerce and industry. For example. the coal industry can use a substantially standard system of accounting; similarly, the country store and general store retailer, the wholesale grocer, the retail grocer, the boot and shoe wholesaler, the boot and shoe retailer, the drug store, the manufacturer of textiles, the manufacturer of machinery, the wholesale clothier, the retail clothier. It is true that a great many systems could be adapted for use in lines other than those for which they are originally arranged, as certain fundamental principles underlie the general structure of accountancy which must be recognized by each group.
> The Commission, however, while recognizing the commercial advantages to be derived from uniformity of systems, does not advise making a change where systems already installed give adequate information and are economically operated.
> The fact must be admitted that in order to put a selling price on a product a manufacturer must first know what it costs to manufacture and sell it. When business was done on a large percentage of profit this was not so essential, but in most lines of industry to-day the large percentage of profit has passed. Manufacturers are working on smaller margins and must absolutely know what their goods cost. Any unreliable method of arriving at cost figures, with margins of profit so close, must be eliminated.
> It is a fact well understood among business men that the general demoralization in a large number of industries has been caused by firms who cut prices not knowing what their goods actually cost to manufacture, and the cost of selling, which is equally important, is almost wholly lost sight of.
> A manufacturer who does not know with a close degree of accuracy what it costs him to produce the different articles he manufactures and what it costs him to sell them, is not in a position to intelligently meet competition and invites business disaster.
> Many of the larger manufacturers have thorough cost accounting systems, which they recognize as necessary in order to give them the information essential to successful management. On the other hand, the number of smaller manufacturers who have no adequate cost accounting system and who price their goods arbitrarily is amazing.
> Proper accounting for the smaller manufacturer is most essential. It is necessary for his success that he know on what particular article he is making a fair profit and on what he is making only a narrow margin of profit or losing money. If he has this information he can concentrate on the manufacture and sale of the product on which the profits are satisfactory.
> Whole industries, in many instances, are suffering from a general lack of intelligent knowledge of cost.

The Commission has no intention of compelling the trade to use any particular bookkeeping method. It does propose to issue literature from time to time which will encourage improvement in accounting methods, and also proposes to devise new systems of bookkeeping which can be adopted by various businesses.

As a foundation for the inquiry the Commission is asking all manner of businesses to fill out the following blank:—

6. Net sales for year (gross sales less trade discounts and outgoing freight on sales.....
7. Net profit (or loss) from operations during the year after deducting all expenses except interest on bonds and on similar obligations .....
8. Net income from other sources during the year.....
9. Depreciation on plant and equipment charged off during the year ..... Average rate, 1915,...per cent.; 1914,...per cent.; 1913,...per cent.
10. Bad debts charged off or provided for during the year..... Percentage of bad debts, or provision therefor, of credit sales, 1915,...; 1914,...; 1913, ...
11. Have Items 9 and 10 been deducted in arriving at Item 7?....

Here Is Some Sound Sense on Selling Advertised Goods.

This Contributor Admits That Nationally Advertised Brands Pay Less Profit Than Unknown Brands, But Says the More Frequent Turn-over More Than Makes That Up. "Three Times Twenty-five Per Cent. is Better Than Thirty-three and One-third Per Cent. Once."

It is a fact that advertised products generally allow a narrower margin of profit to the retailer than unknown commodities (and the retailer doesn't like it—he thinks he pays for the advertising).

But does that mean that advertised goods are less profitable?

Not necessarily and not ordinarily.

Products in demand are not nearly so expensive for the retailer to handle as those which take his time and that of his clerks in explaining to purchasers. He can afford to sell them on a narrow profit.

To put it in figures:—

A retailer may invest $100 in unknown goods which pay him 33 per cent. profit on the selling price, but on which his sales amount to only $150 a year.

Or, he may invest the sam in advertised goods which p only 25 per cent on the sellin but which, on account of act mand, may permit him to do ness of $400 a year.

In the first case he will mal $50 a year gross on his $1 vestment, while in the sec sells out three times a year invests his original $100, a gross profit of $100 inst $50, although he works on a margin.

Many such examples can b licated in "real life."

It is the old story of the sixpence—the advertising m nimble.

But the retailer usually figure this way.

He looks only at the gros gin, and 33 per cent. appears than 25 per cent., unless he s consider that 25 per cent. times beats 33 per cent. once

The retailer generally do keep his stock records and ac in such a way as to bring o retail comparative profitable different lines, however.

He stops at the gross marg thereby not only fools hims cheats advertising of its legi results by refusing to work

The retailer is an intelligen But it simply happens that i day and age he isn't a "bookke and right bookkeeping happ be an important element in s ful retailing.

The coming generation of ers will be trained to use bet counting methods.

Without waiting for the generation, however, the As Advertising Clubs are going and working out systems o accounting for retail jewel tail grocers, retail shoe deale tail druggists, retail hardwar ers.

No greater service could formed for retailers.

ARE you content to make 100 per cent. profit on an article that gives invariable satisfaction?

Shinn's Liquid Rennet is the article. Do you sell Rennet? Does it suit your trade, or do they complain of it and say it goes bad too quickly?

The great point where Shinn's Liquid Rennet defeats its competitors is in its cleanliness. It is made not in a factory, but in a laboratory. Its absolute cleanliness gives it a keeping quality that no other rennet has. We guarantee its keeping quality, in fact, which no other manufacturer does so far as we know.

And quick? You can tell your trade that Shinn's Liquid Rennet will make junket, curds and whey in two to five minutes.

The summer is the great Rennet season. Try on Shinn's Liquid Rennet this year.

The Inequalities of Federal Food Law Enforcement.

From the time when the Federal Food and Drug Act was passed, June 30, 1906, until now, one of the prime weaknesses of its enforcement has been the wide variance in the penalties that are imposed by various courts under it, and the fact that while the law imposes a maximum fine, it imposes no minimum, and some courts therefore impose fines which are no fines at all.

From the last Government report just received, I select three cases which show how irregular the enforcement of the act is. Case 4,160 was against the Charles L. Heinle Specialty Co. of Philadelphia, the charge being selling as "Pure Concentrated Vanilla," a mixture that was not pure concentrated vanilla at all, but was merely a dilute vanilla extract. The Heinle concern plead guilty and was fined Five Dollars.

Case 4,191 was against the Philadelphia Vinegar Co., of Philadelphia, the charge being the selling as "40 Grain Fermented Syrup Vinegar," a product that was merely an imitation syrup vinegar. This concern, like the other, plead guilty and was fined Twenty Dollars by the same court that fined the Heinle Co. five.

Case No. 4,182 was against a coffee house for selling as "Java and Mocha" a coffee containing 30 per cent. of Santos. Here, too, there was a plea of guilty and the fine was Fifteen Dollars.

It might be said that the variance between these fines was justifiable on the ground of variance in the degree of the offenses, but if that is to control it would appear as if the Heinle Co., which got the smallest fine, should have got the largest. The Heinle Co. really mulcted its customers, for it promised more vanilla than it gave. The Philadelphia Vinegar Co. sold a fermented syrup vinegar and delivered an imitation, but the imitation was not materially different, chemically, from the real, and substantially served the same purpose. The coffee house that put 30 per cent. of Santos in its "Java and Mocha" still gave its customers real and substantial value, for "Java and Mocha," so far as drinking quality is concerned, have become empty names. Many another coffee drinks better than either or both, and the chance is that the Santos that was put in this mixture drank better than the other coffees which it displaced.

Yet the vinegar house got fined the most, the coffee house next and the Heinle Co. the least of all.

The Wrong Thing.

The cause whose adherents start to fight among themselves is a lost cause from that moment. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." Why are so many people blind to this?

I have been somewhat amused, but really more disgusted, on reading some matter which appeared in the last issue of the Oregon "Merchants' Magazine," the official organ of one of the factions of organized Oregon retailers. It is an attack on the other faction, and the words that stand out from it are "liar," "diatribe," "ridiculous harangue," "swelled head," "skate," "undiapered kid," "kicked out of the association," "tuck his tail between his flea-bitten hinder legs," "wreckers," "despicable creature," and so on.

From the above it may be gathered that the retail merchants of Oregon have split. Actually, the two halves are so busy fighting each other that they have little time for the interests of the trade. Very probably the cause of the split was just as childish as it usually is.

I don't know who wrote the stuff from which I have culled the above flowers, but I have no doubt that he sat back when it was finished and smacked his lips over it. "That'll cut 'em!" Whoever he is, if I were the faction which he represents, I should gently but firmly dispense with his services. What is wanted when an association splits is a peacemaker and a diplomat, not a specialist in hard names. This man is very successfully widening the split—making enmities that may never heal, inspiring men who should be working together, to cut each other on the street. All mercantile associations have such members and they are often very valuable men, when harnessed and controlled, but as conciliators they are impossible. They ought never to be allowed to come forward when there is a fight, for they always make it worse.

Perhaps Justifiable Cowardice.

And now the retailers of Springfield, Mass., have wakened to the nuisance which they have builded for themselves by sending unlimited merchandise to consumers on approval. They have joined together to appeal to consumers through newspaper advertising not to ask for goods on approval, though they will still send it if consumers insist!

The advertisements are unique. Here is one of them:—

Johnny has the Chicken Pox
And we know how he got it.

Johnny's mother bought him a suit of clothes the other day—a very nice suit—but it was one that Tommy's mother, who lived in the other end of town, had returned after Tommy had worn it three days.

The suit seemed all right and a pressing made it nearly as good as new. But not quite. For Mary sat next to Tommy in school and Mary's little sister had chicken pox. The busy little germs on Mary's dress decided that Tommy's new suit would make a nice, easy living place, and over they went.

They were still there when Tommy's mother brought the suit back, and, assuring the merchant that Tommy hadn't worn it, said:—

"Will you please refund my money?"

Then Johnny got the suit—the one that the germs had moved in to—and now Johnny and his mother, and maybe the rest of the family as well, will pay the penalty because Tommy's mother bought a suit before she was sure that it was just what she wanted.

When you take merchandise on approval, examine it at your earliest convenience. If you decide to return it, do so at once, and in as good condition as you received it. Ask yourself if YOU would buy that merchandise in the condition you are returning it.

The importance and the benefit of this movement will be apparent. Join with your friends and use your influence and example to eliminate this unnecessary addition to the cost of your merchandise, and to better safeguard the health of yourself and family.

ASSOCIATED RETAILERS OF SPRINGFIELD.

This shows rather clearly the cowardice into which merchants fall by reason of excessive competition. How asinine to put it up to consumers not to ask for favors, in the same breath admitting they are still asked they granted! Consumers are as swine about such things will never voluntarily g what they have once beer and who can blame them?

The way to stop the "g approval" nuisance is for th to cut it out. Refuse to sen on approval and the thing i once and for all. It will n settled in any other way.

Being a "Good Business Man."

A corr ent, writin retailer's his custom using bread as an illustrati this:—

Some of your trade ask f vertised brands—give them they ask for, that is one of th of good salesmanship—see to it is fresh when you hand so they will keep calling Others will just ask you for of bread without designatin brand, and right here is your tunity to show that you are a business man. Instead of advantage of this customer, placing herself in your hand handing out to her the lo which you are making the money, hand her the bread th personally know to be the be you have in the store. M steady customer of her, ta chances, try and bring her to store daily for bread.

This involves a serious upon human nature. A who is handling two bran thing, one profitable, the ot profitable, when asked for or "canned corn," is a very person if he hands out th profitable because it is the l most nobody will do it, and question whether anybody sh it. Always provided the pr brand represents good, honest for the money. If it doe oughtn't to be sold at all.

No retailer ought to put h in this position anyway. S he is trying to avoid the Cream of Wheat, which is unprofitable even when sol price. In choosing a subst should under no circu select something that is infer Cream of Wheat. If he doing that, the problem of inating in quality will never He should select something is the equal and if possible

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Mr. Smedley addressed the Booster Club of Lewisburg on April 26th. This is an association of the live-wire business men of the town. The meeting was held at the headquarters of the Royal Arcanum and was well attended. President Darlington introduced the speaker. Addresses were also made by District Attorney Steninger, O. P. Miller and others. A further meeting will be held in the near future, to which the farmers of the territory will be invited.

Mr. Smedley addressed a well-attended meeting of the Watsontown business men on April 27th. The meeting was held in the Opera House. President Taggart presided. Sixteen members of the Sunbury Association were present. Addresses were made by Ely Bion, Prof. Mosser, J. G. Yarnall and Dr. Brown, of Sunbury, and W. F. Shayd, L. L. Lewis and Rev. Dr. DeLong, of Watsontown.

Watsontown is a thriving community and its business people understand the meaning of "co-operation."

Williamsport merchants are protesting vigorously at the action of the city government in increasing the occupation tax fully 50 per cent. This tax is in addition to the present State Mercantile Tax Law. A mass meeting was held on April 28th to decide what action should be taken to have the action of Councils revoked.

See How the Jewelry Schemers Work

Kicked Out of Court When They Try to Sue on One of the Promissory Notes They Are Accustomed to Get From Retailers. Passed the Notes to Another Concern, Which Appears as Plaintiff. Court Says They Were Apparently Two Birds of a Feather.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has devoted considerable attention in the past to the jewelry scheme concerns who send salesmen about the country selling assortments of jewelry to grocers, general storekeepers, druggists and almost anybody, and which are usually pure fakes. Their talking points are the pulling power of the case of jewelry, the increase in business that will result, and a promise to buy back what is left of the assortment at the end of the year.

As a rule the jewelry is trash. The nigger in the woodpile is the habit of these concerns to get retailers who are roped in to sign promissory notes for the full price. These are promptly assigned to an innocent third party for value recieved, who starts suit to collect them when they mature, and can usually collect them, because the law is that a defense which the retailer might have put up if the jewelry concern had itself held the note and sued on it, cannot be put up when a third party sues on it.

A great many times, however, when some retailer refuses to pay his notes on the ground that the jewelry was worthless and the whole scheme a fake, the figurehead who sued on the note gets what he deserved and is kicked out of court. Somebody has sent this paper the report of such a case which was decided only a few days ago. Fondren & Moore, retailers of Kensett, Ark., were induced by the "National Novelty Import Co." of St. Louis, a scheme jewelry concern, to sign up for its scheme and of course the notes were signed also. The scheme was to cost $296, and there were five notes. The National Novelty Import Co. at once passed the notes over to the "Metropolitan Discount Co." of St. Louis, whose business was that of "dealer in commercial paper." About this time, Fondren & Moore discovered that the jewelry was absolute trash, and when the first note came due they refused to pay it. The "Metropolitan Discount Co." entered suit, but the jury said the retailers had been faked and need not pay. There was an appeal, but the verdict of the jury was upheld. The court's opinion gives some interesting glimpses into the way in which these jewelry schemers work:—

> The plaintiff (Metropolitan Discount Co.) introduced two witnesses, one the manager of the National Novelty Import Co., and the other the manager of the discount company. The testimony of both of these witnesses tended to show that the paper, which forms the basis of this suit, was sold to plaintiff in good faith and for value received without any information as to any defenses against it. The testimony of each of the witnesses shows that the two corporations were entirely independent of each other, and that the two corporations had no stockholders or officers in common. There are circumstances, however, connected with the transaction which we think made it a question for the jury to determine, whether or not the plaintiff purchased this paper in good faith and without any knowledge or information concerning the defenses against it. Mr. Scott, the manager of plaintiff company, shows in his testimony a considerable familiarity with the business methods of the National Novelty Import Co. It appears from his testimony and that of the other witnesses that the National Novelty Import Co. sold most of its commercial paper to the plaintiff, and the two corporations had been doing business in that way for several years. The testimony also shows that a considerable amount of paper was sold to other concerns. In fact, it appears from the testimony that it was a feature of their business to turn loose all of their commercial paper as fast as they took it in, selling it to those who were engaged in the purchase of such paper.
> Now, the testimony of the defendants is that this jewelry was absolutely worthless, and the jury were warranted in drawing the inference that the National Novelty Import Co. was engaged in the business of selling worthless jewelry, which the purchaser could not be forced to pay for, and in selling the paper representing the purchase price to other concerns. The familiarity of plaintiff's manager with the methods pursued by the National Novelty Import Co. in conducting its business makes it a question for the jury to determine whether or not the plaintiff company had any intimation that there were defenses against the collection of the commercial paper taken by the National Novelty Import Co. for the price of the worthless jewelry which was sold from time to time. In other words, since it appears that the business of the National Novelty Import Co. was that of selling worthless jewelry, those concerns, which were familiar with its methods of business, must have known that there were defenses against the paper which it was taking in due course of that business. We cannot, therefore, say that there was no testimony at all in support of the finding that the plaintiff was not an innocent purchaser. That is the only question argued here. Judgment affirmed.

Present State of the Law as to Manufacturers Controlling Resale Prices on Trademarked Products. What Can and What Cannot Be Done Under Present Law. Hearing Coming Week to Fix Condensed Milk Standards. Brooklyn Retailers' Association Pursues Certain Packer for Selling Consumers, But is Apparently Convinced That the Charge Was Untrue. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, May 5, 1916.

The Brooklyn Retail Grocers' Association has been going after Libby, McNeill & Libby, Armour & Co., and Swift & Co. on a complaint that these three firms were doing a retail business, selling consumers direct. At the last meeting of the association letters from all of the firms named were read denying the charge absolutely. Libby, McNeill & Libby did admit selling a consumer in one case, but said this was an inadvertence, and had been stopped some time ago. After reading the letters, Secretary Lohman expressed the opinion that he was convinced that they were true and that the association should be satisfied with them.

The American Fair Trade League has issued this week a most interesting brief compiled by its counsel covering "Legal Status of the Maintenance of Uniform Resale Prices." The brief goes into all phases of the plan to enable the manufacturer to control the wholesale and retail selling price, and shows what the present condition of the law is, not only in the United States courts, but in the State courts. It discusses plan of accomplishing the sult; the plan of accomplis printing a notice on the ing the resale price; plan business up with contract at certain prices; the pla enting and copywriting o uct, and so on. Don't say that the more a manufacturer advertises his product the more you'll have to pay for it. That was long ago exploded.

The truthful thing to say—and to tell your customers—is that the more a manufacturer advertises, the bigger his bet on the quality of his product.

As to Apple Prices.

Wachapreague, W. Va.,
May 5, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have noted the Washington article on pushing apple sales. Have you any way of finding dealers from whom lowest prices may be had on box apples? Some time since, I could buy good apples at $1.40 to $1.60, but box dealers are now asking $2.10 to $2.30. I have just gotten a box of 130 apples so can't sell at 2 cents, as we always have to make some leeway for perishable goods. At two for 5 cents they are too high to sell, so at these prices merchants can't sell many.

Please investigate and oblige,
Yours respectfully,
A. H. G. MEARS.

We have found no reason why you should have been charged an advance for box apples; the tendency of the market has been down rather than up. William Weinert & Co., Second and Dock streets, Philadelphia, quoted us on Friday last a price of $1 to $2 on box apples. Are you buying from the right people?

From the Promoter of the Newest Co-operative Buying Scheme.

Philadelphia, April 29, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I take pleasure in writing you personally. Your write-up has been called to my attention. The project has not succeeded. It was first conceived of three years ago when I traveled for a large wholesale coffee and tea house of this city. Of one hundred letters sent out we received three favorable replies, to whom I am writing to-day. Your write-up may be the reason for this. There is a principle which is a bar against all progress, which is proof against all argument and cannot fail to keep a man in everlasting ignorance. This principle is unreasoning prejudice prior to investigation.

In view of the pointed inference made by you, let me say I am a Philadelphian, for years with the Central National Bank and with Edward V. Kane & Co. of Philadelphia. Enclosed find one of the other things in which I am interested.

Closing, I beg to remain,
Sincerely yours,
DE ARMOND LINDES.

This refers to the co-operative buying scheme which recently started to do business in Philadelphia under the name of the "Interstate Agency and Exchange." It seems to be almost stillborn.

Who Wants a Good Man?

————, Pa., May 2, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am not in business at present, having had considerable sickness last year; seven and a half months of inflammatory rheumatism myself, two boys following each other for operations at the City Hospital and my wife later, with all the care, lost her hearing for ten weeks. Less than half time worked at the mills and collieries, and my business principally run on a credit basis, finally forced me out of business. We are all fully recovered and I am in No. 1 condition presently and am seeking a good position as manager of a general store or grocery. I have had experience in general merchandise over twenty-five years and am 46 years (or medium age); married; my oldest son, Harry, manager for one of the Thomas Coal Co., West Virginia, since January 1st, and doing fine. A girl 21 years old, cashier, etc., in the Bergsman Department Store; a boy 14 and my baby, a girl, eleven years of age. I have charge of the music at one of the prominent churches in the city and may be of some use where such is needed, as my family are all musically inclined. Although here all my life nearly, if a good opportunity presents itself I will give it due and proper consideration. I had been six and a half years, previous to going into business, assistant manager to four stores under the same company until they sold out entirely—mines and stores—to another coal company, who immediately did away with the company stores. These four stores did a business of about $22,000 per month, and by careful watching had monthly only about 1 per cent. losses. I speak English and Welsh fluently and know the foreign names of merchandise. I can furnish the very best of references, as my standing you can judge by the enclosed item. If you know of any firm or corporation that is or may be in need of such as I, I will be pleased to hear from you or them.

Very respectfully,

"Dope" on Meeting Chain Stores.

Milltown, N. J., May 2, 1916.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Give us some good dope on how to fight the A. & P. stores or any other such places. Give it to us in the paper. I have had a stamp made and will change the reading often. The first one you will find on the top of this sheet. I stamp it on all my customers' slips.

Yours,
FRANK G. BOYCE.

The stamp Mr. Boyce refers to is indented into the paper and reads as follows:—

WE GIVE DELIVERY
WE GIVE S. & H. STAMPS
WE GIVE LIBERAL CREDIT
THE EMPIRE GROCERY

Mr. Boyce gives us a large order when he asks for "some dope on how to fight the A. & P. stores," etc., and yet it is not a very complicated question. The A. & P. and similar stores become formidable only when they sell cheap. The way to meet them is of course to sell as cheap as they sell, or if you can't do that, to make your customer glad to pay the higher price to you. This is the whole subject right in a nutshell. Of course when you deliver and do all those other things, you can't expect to meet the prices of concerns that do none of them. You may, however, render such delightful and satisfactory service—this is really the way to meet A. & P. stores—that a customer will prefer to deal even at a slightly higher

Dear Sir:—We find the weekly Legal Department, in which have appeared discussions of legal problems, very helpful. Have used it a few times myself. But often have seen questions asked and answered for other people which was a great help. There is one in April 3d as to whether a grocer could take shelving, etc., with him when moving. I, for one, have appreciated the weekly Legal Department.

Thanking you for your real service in that department, I am,

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change from a week ago. Business is good in almost all lines and prices are unchanged, being steady to firm on the entire line. Importers of tea in this country are expecting to pay 2 or 3 cents a pound more on teas next season, largely by reason of the higher freights. In addition to that silver is very much higher in China than usual, and these two factors operating in combination are expected to advance prices generally. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee option market has been the subject of considerable speculation during the week, and values were easier than they were a week ago, but later in the week options stiffened up again. Actual coffee, however, has not changed; all grades of Rio and Santos are in quiet demand at precisely the same price as a week ago. Milds are unchanged, the entire line being steady. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

The sugar market is very strong and high. Raws have advanced again, until quotation is now 6.64. Granulated is still being quoted at around 7½ to 7¾. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is fair. The only important development of the week was the sale to American refiners of 500,000 tons of Java sugar. This sold at a high price very close to current quotations, and it will not be available until August, therefore it does not have a direct effect upon the market, but is nevertheless being discounted to some extent.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged at the advance noted last week. Compound syrup is dull at ruling quotations. Sugar syrup and molasses are both comparatively high but quiet.

Fish.

Handlers of mackerel are expecting some new domestic fish around the first of June, and are, therefore, a little more anxious to clean up their remaining stocks of old mackerel. The remaining stocks, however, are so light that this did not make any particular slump in the market. Buyers are merely a little more ready to sell than they have been. Prices on Norway mackerel are about as they were a week ago. Cod, hake and haddock are over their season and are practically out of the market anyway. Domestic sardines of the new pack are beginning to be available, at ruling quotations. Imported sardines still very scarce and high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged on last week's basis. The demand has been better in the West than in the East. Futures are firmer and almost all packers are asking 82½ cents in a large way f. o. b. Corn is in strong position, although prices show no change from a week ago. Future corn is also strong and packers are here and there withdrawing from the market. Peas are unchanged and dull. Apples ruling at low prices and dull. California canned goods show no change and in light demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods in seasonable demand at unchanged prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are working up and, to come forward, the quotation in a large way is $4.15 per bushel. Some spot holders are underselling the market about 15 cents. Marrows are unchanged and quiet. California limas, green and Scotch peas are all unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

There seems to be no reason to doubt reports of the short prune crop. Some authorities are predicting about one-half of last year's crop, while others say it will be about 60 or 70 per cent. Everybody seems to agree that there will be some shortage. If the crop is about one-half of last year's, it will be no more than this country can consume, and the rivalry between foreign and domestic buyers will almost certainly keep prices up. The market is about ½ cent higher than last week and the outlook is strong. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and dull. Raisins on spot are quiet and in seasonable demand. A considerable quantity of new raisins have been sold so far at the opening prices, but without any price being named and without any provision that the sale is subject to the approval of the price. Currants and other dried fruits are dull and unchanged.

Butter.

There is an active demand for all grades of butter. Receipts are increasing, but the demand is also increasing, though not enough to prevent a further decline of 1 cent during the week. A steady increase in the make is likely from now on, accompanied by at least one additional slight decline in the near future.

Eggs.

Eggs are unchanged and in good demand, both for consumption and storage. The quantity is running average high, and the entire situation is healthy on the present basis. While the quality remains as good as it is now, and the demand as active, there will probably be little or no change.

Cheese.

The market for old cheese is firm at an advance of about ¼ cent; consumptive demand is good. New cheese is steady at a price that is now about only 1 cent per pound under the price of old. The supply of new cheese will increase from now on, but as long as the demand for export continues as good as it is now, there will probably not be very much decline.

Provisions.

There is an active consumptive demand for all grades of smoked meats and prices are about as they were a week ago. Pure lard is firm at an advance of ½ cent and a good consumptive demand is reported. The supplies are reported light. Compound lard is also firm at an advance of ¼ cent. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all quiet and unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Rice.

The demand for the week as a whole has been fairly active, and a better tone is apparent, in that local and out-of-town buyers are showing more interest in the offerings, and the general trade outlook is steadily improving. The incoming receipts are moderate, and as a result, prices are firmly held, with hardening tone on all desirable offerings, both Honduras and Blue Rose, the latter inciting renewed interest on account of reported scarcity and rapidly advancing prices.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report marked improvement over last week, owing to the fact that the trade is beginning to realize the rapid advance in all grades deavoring to protect themse ahead as possible. Due t vanced basis on Blue Rose dicted that Carolinas will be out more freely.

At New Orleans Blue Ros in active demand, prices st der light offerings. This a said of broken rices. Hond tracting attention from the tr eral and large sales have through at higher prices. tinue very scarce.

In the Interior, Southwest Texas and Arkansas, the mil ing their remaining stocks and several claim they are e out of all grades. What remains in farmers' hands unusually high figures.

Refined Sugar.—The market has ruled strong, active and higher again in sympathy with the strong raw sugar market, and being influenced by large export buying and further inquiries at above our domestic basis. The demand for refined increased basis 7.40 cents and shortly after noon on Thursday Franklin, American, Howell and Arbuckle advanced their price to basis 7.50 cents, regular terms. Federal advanced their price to basis 7.75 cents at 3 o'clock Thursday. Later Warner advanced to basis 7.75 cents. All refiners immediately became firm at the advance. Quite some business has been entered at basis 7.50 cents. Further advances are looked for. We look for a much increased withdrawal demand as the consumption will gradually become heavier from day to day as the season advances and better weather conditions prevail. We think it advisable to order well ahead of immediate requirements and to carry better stocks in store. Shipments from Philadelphia in most cases can be made immediately.

Raw Sugar.—The market has ruled very strong again, with holders generally asking higher prices. Large purchases for European account of both raws and refined at full and higher prices influenced the market, which closes very strong in all positions.

Sale reported Thursday, 10,000 bags Cubas for May shipment at equal 6.52 cents, and 10,000 bags Cubas for June shipment at equal 6.65 cents, duty paid to operators. Sale also reported cargo San Domingos for May shipment at equal 6.56 cents, c. i. f. Philadelphia for Canada. The exchange market has ruled slightly easier to-day upon heavy realizing. Closing quotations as follows: May, 5.54 cents; June, 5.60 cents; July, 5.65 cents; August, 5.67 cents; September, 5.69 cents.

Imported Fish Specialties.

We can report only a regular hand-to-mouth demand for all kinds of salt fish, except for Norway mackerel which are in better demand and rather firmer in price, as supplies are getting short.

Imported Sardines.—French, as well as Portuguese and Norwegian, are all in scant supply, prices continue as high as ever, arrivals are very small, demand may be called fair, considering the enormous prices which are asked for these goods, and we cannot look for a change in this situation until European markets become more normal. As long as the countries now at war continue to buy whatever is offered, and whatever is packed of imported sardines, principally from Norway at whatever prices the packers choose to ask for them, we shall not be able to do a regular and larger business in imported sardines. Strange as it may seem, there are still lots of smoked sardines offered in the various markets of the United States which in price are very much below to-day's importing cost. We are of course obliged to bring over some Norwegian sardines, for which we are compelled to pay the enormous prices which are paid by our competitors in Europe. but to be perfectly frank about it, we find it very difficult to sell these goods in quantities at a price which will yield a profit. The consumption of imported sardines, particularly Norwegian, has certainly fallen off very considerably, owing to the advance in price. Even if the new catch of Norwegian sardines, which is going to start very shortly, should be a very big one, there is not much likelihood of seeing lower prices in the near future, because the Norwegian packers have their own troubles in securing tinplate and other materials necessary for canning their products.

The fish business in Norway continues in its abnormal condition. While under ordinary conditions herrings sell in Norway at kr. 15-20 for a fish packed in barrels, the price is now kr. 80, and of this price the fishermen get kr. 50 to kr. 60 a cran, so it is the Norwegian fishermen who are benefited principally by this advance in price. There is no chance of a change in these conditions as long as the war lasts, as Germany and Austria are now buying and taking those herrings without regard to price.

The cod fisheries in Norway have given a very meager result, in fact, the worst result that we recollect, only 1.2 millions of stockfish and 5.1 millions of codfish this season, against 4.1 millions of stockfish and 11.9 millions of codfish last season. No stocks of last season's stockfish are left over in Norway, nor are there any here, so it can be readily seen that the prices for this year's goods will be abnormally high. Naturally, this will restrict the consumption to a certain extent. Most of the codfish is exported in a salted condition to Germany, and Germany's agents are buying up whatever is offered.

Spices.

The market continues fairly active, though some little unsettled. Prices, we find, are decidedly steadier this week than during preceding weeks. Foreigr cables all name higher prices than those in effect here. Present values are likely to be maintained over the next two or three weeks and then we expect to see a reaction and higher prices prevail.

Pepper.—There has been considerable trading during the past week at lower prices. The market is now steadier and we believe prices will react and advance slightly.

Red Peppers.—Unchanged in price and in fair demand.

Cloves.—In moderate trade demand. Prices unchanged. Prices, however, for arrival are firmer.

Pimento (Allspice).—Unchanged and without special feature.

Mace.—Firm and in fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Nutmegs.—In very active demand, with a very firm tone. The visible supply of nutmegs is far short of normal requirements.

Cassias.—Steady in price. There have been some large sales made during the week.

Gingers.—In only fair demand at generally unchanged prices.

Green Ginger Root.—The first importation of this article is likely to arrive before the middle of June. Prices will be very much higher this season, due to higher cost of labor and freight charges.

Tapioca.—Fairly steady and in good demand at generally unchanged prices.

Paprikas.—There have been some large arrivals recently. Prices, however, are unchanged. The Hungarian grade continues out of stock.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Caraway has advanced sharply during the week. Higher prices are probable. Mustards have been fairly active at unchanged prices. Poppy and celery in fair demand. Turmeric is in big demand. Prices steady.

An Interesting Canned Goods Suit.

The cast of Strasbaugh, Silver & Co. against Steward Sanitary Can Co., of Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, recently decided by the Maryland Court of Appeals, contains matters of interest to canners as well as to business men in general. In this case Strasbaugh, Silver & Co. purchased, in their own name, sanitary cans for the Wright Canning Co. The Wright Canning Co., after the purchase of the cans for it, sold for future delivery tomatoes to be packed in the cans so purchased. There was delay in making delivery of the cans and the machine for closing them, and also in the operation of the machine after it arrived. Under all the circumstances, the Wright Canning Co. were not able to fill their future contracts for sanitary tomatoes, and were compelled to go upon the market and buy to fill their orders, at considerably increased prices. In view of the situation, Strasbaugh, Silver & Co. refused to pay the invoice for the car of cans. Suit was brought against them by the Steward Co. to enforce collection, and, by way of defense, Strasbaugh, Silver & Co. set up the losses accruing to the Wright Canning Co. At the trial of the case in the Court of Common Pleas of Baltimore city, the defendants were not permitted to introduce evidence as to the loss suffered by the Wright Canning Co., and the Steward Co. recovered judgment against them. On appeal, the judgment of the lower court was reversed and a new trial awarded. In its opinion, the Court of Appeals said that under the facts of the case Strasbaugh, Silver & Co. were the agents of the Wright Canning Co., and as such could maintain an action brought in their own name to recover damages sustained by their principal in consequence of the breach of the contract, and as they could maintain such an action when instituted by themselves, they could in a suit against them brought upon the contract set up as a defense damages suffered by the Wright Canning Co. It appeared in the evidence that Strasbaugh, Silver & Co. had a contract with the Wright Canning Co., that was in force at the time of the purchase of these cans, by which they were to furnish certain supplies and materials and advance money to said company to be used in the operation of its factory, and the company was to place with the defendants for sale its entire pack of canned goods, and out of the proceeds of the sale they were to reimburse themselves for supplies and money furnished and advanced by them. The court held that where an agent is thus interested, as for commissions or by reason of special property in the subject matter, and the contract in reference thereto is made in his name, it is perfectly competent for him to sue and maintain an action thereon in his own name, as if he were the principal, and if under such circumstances the agent can sue and recover the full measure of damages, there is no reason why, looking to his relation to the transaction, he may not recover the full amount of damages from a breach of the contract. course sues and recovers as tr his principal.

Hard Luck.

Here's a bit of a hard luck story. Just goes to show what we're up against in this world.

The moral of it, if you ask me, is not to take any strange salesmen into your buzzom. I suppose I oughtn't to say any strange salesmen, because I'm strange myself to some of the fellows I call on. Strange at first anyway. Some salesmen have honest kind of faces—you know right away that they're all right. I've got one of that kind of faces myself, if I do say it as shouldn't. Why only the other day me and one of my customers was talking about that, and he said to me, he said: "Now take your face. I can't think of a face like that being anything but honest. A face like that's got to be something."

Great compliment, I thought that. I bowed and smiled, like I always do when anybody throws a bucket of flowers at me.

And so what I really ought to say is, don't take any strange salesmen into your buzzom unless they've got one of those honest kind of faces so you feel sure of 'em even though you ain't ever seen 'em before.

A customer of mine the other day put his name to an order for a lot of cocoa. A salesman came in his store and handed over his card, representing a New York house. My man had never heard of it before, and he didn't know the salesman. I ain't going to name the New York house, because there's a chance it may be straight. But I am going to name the salesman because I'll take a chance he ain't straight. His name was Charles P. Walther. At least that was the name on his card. Between you and me, his real name's more likely to be a number.

They had a free deal on. Little Charles had samples of his stuff and it looked all right. The price was a little less than the price my man had been paying for cocoa and then they had a free deal on—I think half a box with every two boxes.

It looked good and my man signed an order for two boxes.

"Did you keep a copy?" I said.

"No."

"Well why in thunder didn't you?"

"Oh, I don't know. I didn't, that's all."

By and by the stuff came and it was four boxes instead of two. He couldn't sell four boxes of cocoa before it went bad to save his soul. So he wrote the New York house and they wrote back that the order called for four boxes and the free deal was only on four boxes, not on two at all, and it was up to him to take it. He wrote back he wouldn't take it and they said they'd sue him if he didn't, and by the great rhinocerous, they up and did it.

Sent it to a lawyer right in his town.

"Are you sure the order you signed didn't say four boxes?" I asked him.

"I'm sure I only ordered two boxes."

"I know, but are you sure the order didn't say four?"

He had to own up he wasn't, and there you are.

"Have you got a lawyer?" I asked him.

"Sure, I had to pay him $10 right off," he said.

"What does he say?"

"Well, he says that if the order calls for four boxes, they may get judgment against me. I may lose the case. It comes up in court next week or two."

"Did you read the order at all?"

"No; he was busy talking all the time, so I just signed it. I didn't think he was going to cheat me like this."

Ain't it a nice little pickle? Even if he wins the case he's out the $10 that he had to pay his lawyer. And maybe more, because the lawyer won't be satisfied with any little old $10. They've got him coming and they've got him going. If he loses he's in it and if he wins he's in it. Fine!

Ain't it a great world?

Here's the real point. A fellow told me the other day—he's a road man, too—that you could get a lot of retail fellows to sign anything if you'd only offer 'em enough. Make the price cheap enough, or offer to throw enough goods in f for nothing, and down g name on the little old c three-quarters of the don't know any more wh signing than the mar moon.

It's pretty, pretty bla true. Too bad, too.

The Knack of Not Talking Back.—It isn't necessary that you allow any one to rub it in, no matter who he may be, but it is necessary to take a deserved calling down like a man. If in checking your work the pound of coffee you put up weighed seventeen ounces, you will hear something. If you didn't repeat the address given you for that order that wasn't delivered, you're in for a sharp call. Some fellows talk back and make a double mess of it.

Never do that. It puts you in bad. Bring your fist down on the counter and say, "Yes sir, that was my carelessness, but I'll wager the price of ten such orders that it won't occur again." Be glad you're with people who follow you up. Respect the manager that's on the job and keeps you there. He's a friend of yours. To be sure, he's ugly at times. No. 362.—A Most Important Decision as to What is Fraud in Selling or Advertising.

In a most important decision which the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a few days ago, a crimp has been put into every business schemer who misrepresents his project, and every advertiser who misrepresents his goods. A principle which is new in the sense that it has never before been elucidated so clearly and so emphatically, has now been laid down by the Supreme Court, and it will undoubtedly influence for good every court in the United States.

The principle in question is this: Where a seller, or an advertiser has misrepresented his goods, it is no defense for him to plead that he gave fair value for the customer's money. In other words, "the $2 shoes that I offered for $1.50 may not have been worth $2, but they were worth $1.50, therefore the buyer got the worth of his money and there was no fraud."

The United States Supreme Court has completely knocked the bottom out of this. The substance of the decision is that if an advertiser or a seller has by false representations led a customer to expect more than a fair value, it is not enough to give fair value. Which after all, is nothing more than common sense, although certain courts have decided the exact contrary. In fact this very decision was an appeal from the United States Court of Florida, which had decided that there was no fraud if the buyer got fair value for his money, no matter what had been promised.

The case which brought this decision was typical and interesting. The New South Farm and Home Company was a land promoting concern which bought a large tract of Florida land and divided it into small 10-acre farms. Much advertising was done in Northern papers and this and the literature sent all over the country painted the desirability of the little farms in glowing colors. Many farms were sold and some of the dissatisfied victims appealed to the Government. The latter, after an investigation, had the leaders in the promoting company arrested for fraudulent use of the mails. The action was brought under the following clause of the Federal laws:—

> Whosoever, having devised any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises, shall for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice or attempting so to do, place or cause to be placed any letter, circular or advertisement in any post office, to be sent or delivered by the post office establishment of the United States, shall be guilty, etc.

The charge against the land company was that it had misrepresented its proposition in the following respects: possible earnings, steamer service, crops every month, surrounding land improved, water 100 feet down, roads laid, fences laid, school houses and hotels handy, cheap lumber, guaranteed title, telephones, increasing land values, no malaria or insects, high altitude, good drainage. The price of the farms was $30 per acre.

When the land schemers were indicted, they fought the indictment on the ground that nobody had denied that the land was well worth $30 per acre, therefore there was no fraud. This contention the court below upheld. The court said the representations were puffing. "Raising the expectations of the purchaser, but giving that purchaser value received for his money, though not fulfilling those expectations, is not an offense against the law."

This was one of those decisions which make laymen say there is no justice. To me it seemed like false reasoning, and it evidently looked the same to the Supreme Court, to which the case was at once taken.

If I offer an article which I say is worth $2, for a dollar, it is a wholly different offer than one to give an article worth $1 for a dollar. And if I make the first offer, and it is accepted, I certainly do not comply with it when I deliver an article worth only $1. And if I offer at $30 an acre a farm which I claim has certain attributes, and somebody, wishing to get those attributes, accepts my offer, tainly not complying wi tract when I deliver a f lacks some of the very which got my offer acce

The principle seen enough and the Supreme versed the Florida Dist with a very brief opinion of which was as follows

> Mere puffing indeed mi within the meaning of th that is, the mere exagg the qualities which the a but when a proposed selle yond that and assigns to qualities which it does no he does not simply magni ion the advantages which invents advantages and serts their existence. He the limits of puffing and false representations and

If the spirit of this adopted by other courts doubtedly will be, it n every dealer who advert silk for 98 cents" must fairly worth $1.50 u usage. It will no longer

Welch Monopoly Suit Tried Again and Won.

The case of Frey & Co., Baltimore wholesale grocers, against the Welch Grape Juice Co., brought under the Clayton Act and the Sherman Anti-trust Law—based on the refusal of the grape juice company to supply its product to the jobbing house, which had cut prices from the Welch list—was tried a second time in Baltimore last week and resulted in a victory for the Welch Co. On the first trial in the Federal Court the preceding week, the jury disagreed, though rumor around the trade had it that all but one of the jurors was for dismissing the Frey complaint. The case was submitted on two counts. The first rested on the question of whether or not there existed, in the light of the first clause of the Sherman Anti-trust Law, an agreement, understanding or combination, between the Welch Grape Juice Co. and its jobbing distributors, by which the resale price of its product was fixed; and if such were the fact, whether the grape juice company cut off Frey because he cut the resale price and refused to enter into such illegal combination, agreement or understanding. The second count was under the Clayton Act and referred to the jury the question of whether or not the Welch Co. had discriminated against Frey by returning a certified check accompanying its demand for grape juice in January, 1915, accompanied by a letter in which the company not only refused to sell him at the jobbing price, but offered to let him have goods if he wished them at the retail price. This letter, it was contended by the Welch Co. was simply a polite way of refusing to deal with Frey as a jobber. The Frey Co. has always insisted that it means to test the merits of this case to the finish. It still has two similar cases pending, respectively, against the Beech-Nut Packing Co. and Cudahy & Co., and whether it will rest its fate on the trial of those cases or carry an appeal in the Frey case to the Supreme Court is not yet stated.

15 Years of Supremacy in the can-making business is your assurance of quality and durability when you buy

Heekin Heavy Duty Steel Cans

Since 1901 we have manufactured all sorts of cans, pails and tin containers. That our products give satisfaction is best evidenced by the number of concerns who use them.

Illustrated here is our Heavy Duty Steel Can for coffee or crackers—made in two sizes:

For Cracker, 15½ in. x 27¾ in.
For Coffee, 15½ in. x 20¾ in.

Perfectly air-tight, moisture-proof and dust-proof. Will retain all the aroma and goodness of coffee, all the freshness of crackers. Plain lacquered or stenciled with any design.

Send for sample.

Don't Buy Baking Powder on Price

You can get a baking powder at almost any price you want to pay. You can get a baking powder that will yield you possibly a couple of hundred per cent.—if you can sell it.

But in the end you will be sorry you did not send out Rumford to represent you, rather than the cheap brand whose only attraction was the profit it offered.

Rumford is clean, wholesome, honest, substantial, satisfactory merchandise. It brings the customer back for more of it, and it pays you well for your work. There is no better leavener than Rumford Baking Powder.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Kindly tell me through your columns what you think of newspaper advertisement inclosed. We use this style as a rule, sometimes larger space, very seldom less than five inches double.

Thanking you,
Respectfully,
GEO. W. KAPPELT.

The advertisement enclosed measured 7 inches double column, and is herewith reproduced:—

The Market Basket
910 Parade St.

Our Last Lenten Specials for This Season . . . .

Cleaned Boneless Herring, regular 20c lb., special, pound .. 17c	Bismarck Herring, king of all Herring, regular 25c can, special, can 20c.

	Box Sure Running Salt 5c

Easter Oranges, sweet and juicy, dozen.....35c

Fancy Large Yellow Evp. Peaches, 3 pounds..25c

Kellogg's Krumbles have arrived, package....10c
Holland Rusk, fresh lot, package 10c
Duff's Molasses, always good, can 18c

I don't like the typographical arrangement of this advertisement. The printer has not made the best of it. A better heading would have been this:—

Market Basket's Last Lenten Specials for This Season

This would have been a cleaner heading and the address could have gone at the bottom, where it belongs, anyway. The advertisement is too much cut-up. It would have looked better if all the paragraphs had been either half width or full width, and if all had either had a heading or had none. There is no uniformity now at all, some paragraphs are one width, some another, some have headings, some have none.

* * *

As a matter of fact, has the idea of the heading been carried out here? Is everything advertised on this circular a Lenten special? I should have kept everything out except Lenten goods. Salt, and oranges, and peaches and several other things don't seem to belong here at all. Advertising that starts out to make one point should make it and stop.

Sellers of Future Canned Goods Must Fulfill Contracts or Pay Damages.

Two Cases Recently Tried in Harford, County, Md., Contradict the Belief of Many That It is Useless to Sue a Packer or Jobber Who Fails to Deliver. Maryland Tomato Packer Compelled to Pay Two Buyers Damages.

There is an impression in the trade that when a dealer buys canned goods for future delivery, and the packer or the jobber, as the case may be, fails to deliver, it is useless to sue for damages because none can be recovered. How this impression, which is wholly baseless, ever gained credence, it is difficult to say, but it has influenced many dealers to lie down when packers failed to deliver and take their losses without resistance.

That the law does hold a packer strictly to his future canned goods contract, or a jobber, is made plain by two suits that were recently brought and tried in Harford County, Maryland, against a tomato packer who had failed to fill some of his future contracts. The defense in these cases was that the packer had made every effort to pack the goods by procuring the necessary acreage to be grown for him and by accumulati plies and having his hou all ready for the canning but that by reason of the wet weather prevailing during the canning seas were ruined and he was pack the goods he had c sell. The court held th set up were not availab fense to the contract. I the jury allowed th money recompense for of the contract.

The contracts offered in these cases covered s 3 standard tomatoes, the brand of the packer. cause of this designati packer sought to invoke of his crops as a defens tion, but the court, by ov defense on that ground, recognize the right of th disregard his contract his failure to make deli ground that he was una under his label because ure of his crops. In ot the effect of the court' to require future contra strictly fulfilled and to contracts out of the class there is sometimes read cation that the contra avoided if the goods wh subject of the contract ar time of its execution in and do not thereafter co istence.

Wording of stamp of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association

Facsimile of stamp of Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives

Did You Ever Suffer from Crooked Salesmen?

The specialty stamp has done more to oust crooked specialty salesmen than anything else that was ever tried.

It takes a mighty nerve for a crooked salesman to do anything to an order that has a specialty stamp on. He knows that his offense will be considered exceedingly flagrant, for he has violated the whole code of ethics of the specialty stamp system. He knows that the thing will be run down and that nobody will ever feel like trusting him with a job again.

That is why manufacturers who use the specialty stamp—and their retail customers—are almost never bothered, now-a-days, with dishonest salesmen.

You retailers were just as much sufferers from dishonest salesmen as we were. This one thing that we have done to get rid of them ought to give the specialty stamp the call with you for all time to come.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can possibly sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.
